This: used to indicate a person, thing, idea or event as present, near or by way of emphasis.

Minute: an exact point in time; instant; moment.

-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary

In this collage of photographs and expressions , we, the members of the L'Acadien have attempted to capture the essence of the year. We chose the title ". . .this minute." because this book emphasizes campus life from August 1999 to May 2000, the university as it is today. We felt that it was not our job to shock or provoke any more than the moments themselves were shocking or provoking, nor was it our job to glorify the good times while ignoring the bad, nor were we supposed to chronicle the past or to predict the future. However, we agreed that it was our job to provide an accurate account of the people, ideas, events and feelings that influenced life on this campus so that everyone, whether one week from now or at the turn of the next century, can flip through the following 400 pages and know exactly what this minute felt like.

As this decade, century and millennium come to an end, there is no shortage of accounts of the past. Nor is there a shortage of predictions of the future. With the focus on the future and its ties to the past, the present is easily overlooked. With life set at such a fast pace and college being a time of transition, students often are more concerned with forgetting yesterday and preparing for tomorrow than with concentrating on today. The present is a transition itself, changing from the future to the past, and it is this fleeting moment in time that we tried to capture.

This minute was certainly a variety of events and feelings. Excitement, disappointment, pride, frustration, curiosity, sadness and uncertainty all played a role. We have provided you with scenes and words from the occurrences of the past year in hopes that you will bring to each your own thoughts and feelings.

So, it is our wish that in the past year you experienced every minute to its fullest, and you will be able to flip through the following pages and add your personal memories and feelings to the words and pictures that create the minutes of this book. If you missed it the first time, this is another opportunity for you to treasure the moment - the hours, the days, the weeks, the months and the semesters that made up " . . .this minute."

"UL Lafayette has given me a lot, and I wanted to give something back."

FERRIS WHEELER

When one imagines what a student government president might be like, certain images come to mind. One would likely see a leader, a student advocate and a respected student. His office door would always be open for any student seeking advice, looking for an answer to a problem, or just wanting to speak with the president. These are all qualities of SGA President Ferris Wheeler.

"UL Lafayette has given me a lot, and I wanted to give something back," explained Wheeler as to why he undertook the enormous responsibility.

Let's say, though, that one could temporarily strip away the title "SGA president," leaving only Ferris Wheeler. Behind the title, this is the student that you would find.

Wheeler came from Covington and always enjoyed camping and the outdoors. Upon arriving at the university during the fall 1994 semester, this finance major recalls knowing only one person, but he quickly and easily made friends.

Throughout his college years, Wheeler said he has enjoyed spending time with the student organizations. During the summer he volunteers with the Student Orientation Staff. Much of his remaining time throughout the year is spent with his fraternity, Kappa Sigma. A musician is responsible for sparking Wheeler's interest in the fraternity.

"Jimmy Buffet was a Kappa Sigma, and I like his music," explained Wheeler.

The most memorable event that Wheeler has experienced on campus was when his residence hall roommate got caught shooting a slingshot out of their window. They were both promptly escorted down to Bittle Hall where they had a long chat with the university police.

In many ways, Wheeler is a typical college student. For example, like most UL Lafayette students he has gotten more parking tickets than he can count. However, he does have a rather unusual pet. Calvin, his pet cactus was recently found missing, with only what Wheeler considers a ransom note left in its place. Rather than getting mad, he drew a picture of the cactus plant and posted "have you seen me" signs around the SGA office.

Another unusual aspect of Wheeler is his nickname.

"It all began, stated Wheeler, "in the seventh grade."

Apparently there was another boy in his class who had the name Greg just like he does. With a last name like Wheeler, and his tendency to be absent (just like Ferris Beuler) the teacher jokingly called him Ferris, and the name stuck. Of course, when asked what his favorite movie of all time was, he excitedly responded, "Ferris Beuler's Day Off!"

BRAD BERTINOT

"It is the greatest feeling in life, well, one of the greatest feelings in life," said Brad Bertinot, of his military days parachuting out of airplanes.

Before coming to UL Lafayette, Bertinot, planning to have a career in the military, spent his first two years at Kemper, a private military college.

"It was very different atmosphere. I was used to being able to do my own thing, and all of the sudden I was put into prison. You can't do anything. You can't even go to Wal-Mart," explained Bertinot.

Bertinot has since changed his mind and now wants to become a lawyer. If law school does not work out, Bertinot could put his musical talents to use.

"I write humorous folk songs that go over well at 2 a.m. at the fraternity house," said Bertinot. "I'm up to seven songs."

Bertinot copies the musical style of world-renowned artist and personal favorite Adam Sandler.

"If it was not for Billy Madison and sneaking Jim Beam into the barracks at night, I would have never made it through those first two years of college," admitted Bertinot.

Bertinot is also the Grand Procurator for his fraternity, Kappa Sigma.

"It gives me a warped sense of democracy," confessed Bertinot. "It is so easy to get things done because it is not really a democracy. Your brothers have 100 percent faith in you and your decisions."

While not entertaining his fraternity brothers, Bertinot stays busy working as SGA vice president.

"I just try to get what I feel deep down inside would be best for the students," said Bertinot. "It's hard sometimes, but every now and then you get to help a student and it's the coolest thing in the world."

Perseverance has paid off for Bertinot. After he was nominated for a vacant seat in the College of Business and the Senate rejected him, he ran for vice president in the next election and won.

"That's why Kenny is my favorite Southpark character, because every episode he dies, but he's right back at it. He has perseverance," said Bertinot.

In his spare time Bertinot said he likes to "play the guitar, drink large amounts of alcohol, and try not to get in trouble."

"I love finding the most rinky-dink bar in Lafayette and going to it," admitted Bertinot. "There are less-refined people, but it is so much fun because they are happy to see a bunch of college kids having a good time. You need that change once in a while."

He also plays intramural football, tennis, hunts and fishes.

"I really don't like to hunt deer," said Bertinot. "But, because of family pressures, I killed Bambi once, and I'll never do it again. I love to eat Bambi, but Bambi's a pain in the ass to kill."

Founded in 1968, the UL Lafayette Art Museum is located on the second floor of Fletcher Hall. It is currently under the direction of Gil Carner, who is serving as interim director until a permanent replacement for former director Brian Lafaye can be found. Carner is also the Assistant Dean of the College of the Arts and teaches classes in drawing and painting.

"I'm enjoying the challenge of being museum director. Although this is a related field, it requires a more entrepreneurial spirit than teaching classes. At times it can be a challenge to balance the work this position requires with my other duties," said Carner.

The museum featured exhibits by students and distinguished artists. Various exhibits included photography, sculpture, painting, computer animation and jewelry making. This year's exhibits include From 3: The Southern Aesthetic Installed, Tom Secrest Retrospective, and three senior Bachelor of Fine Arts student exhibits. Tom Secrest is a former UL Lafayette faculty member.

Carner encourages students to visit the museum to view the talent of their fellow students, as well as exhibits of other artists.

"I encourage all students to visit the museum, especially because part of their tuition helps to pay for the museum," said Carner.

MARIE DESORMEAUX

"I really think that we need free use of canoes in the Cypress Lake!"

Elected in the Spring 1999 semester, SGA Treasurer Marie DesOrmeaux is a very busy student. She starts out early in the morning with her daily routine. It includes two alarm clocks, both set to ring at unusual times like 6:02. Once out of bed, she brushes her teeth and grabs a cup of coffee before hitting the shower. Playing the same Indigo Girls CD everyday, she allows herself only two songs to shower.

Coffee in the morning is just the beginning. She then drinks Coke all day and finishes with hot decaffeinated tea in the evenings before bed. Going to bed has a routine all its own.

With more than 1,000 glow-in-the-dark stars on her ceiling, DesOrmeaux first turns on all the lights, allowing the stars to become charged. Finally, she turns out the lights and watches her miniature galaxy glow. Currently, she is adding the same glow-in-the-dark stars to her SGA office.

DesOrmeaux believes that the biggest problem with the university today is apathy, particularly with some professors.

"I find that a lot of teachers just throw information out. Some teachers, like Dr. Rickels, find creative ways to present material," stated DesOrmeaux.

DesOrmeaux is definitely not apathetic, especially when it comes to campus organizations. She spends her time with the SGA, Kappa Delta, College Republicans, Honors, SPEAK, football player hostesses and many honors societies.

DesOrmeaux has many memories of UL Lafayette. Her favorite class was ballroom dancing. Her least favorite was a chemistry class she took during the summer session at eight in the morning with no air conditioning in the room.

The one memory that stands out above all the rest is from before she was even a student. One day while with her mother, she went to feed the ducks at Cypress Lake. She witnessed an alligator attack a duck. But that was in the past.

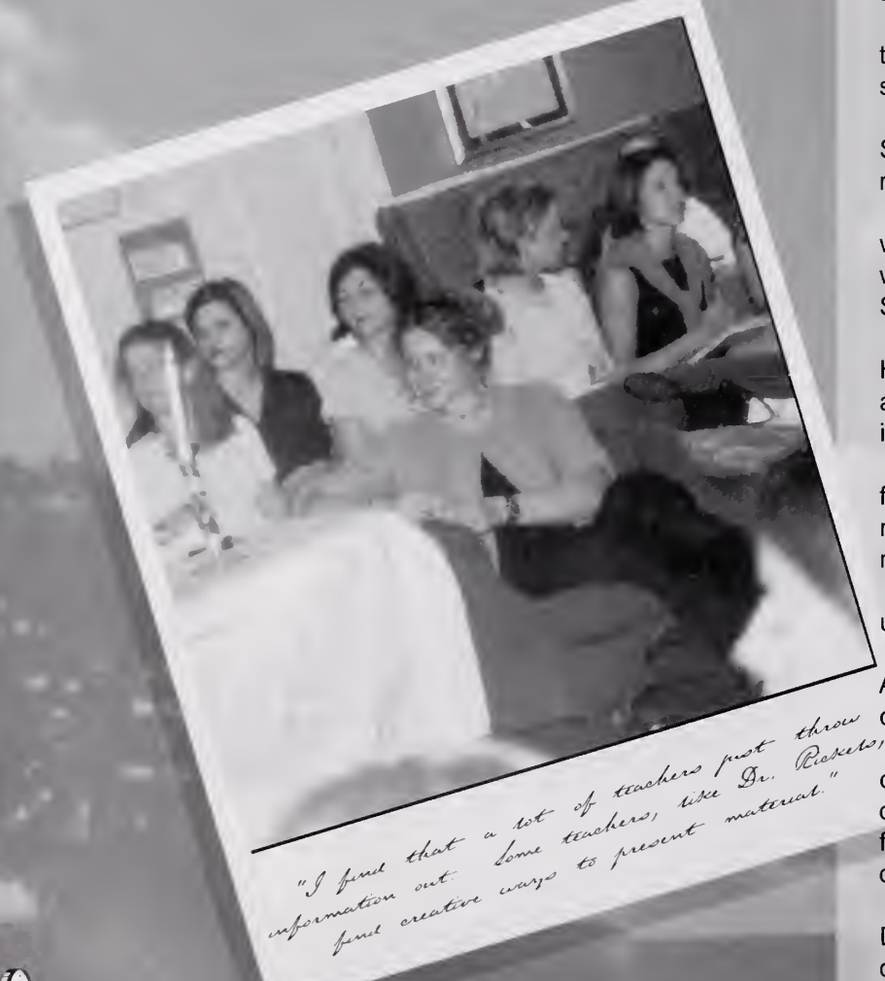

As far as the future, DesOrmeaux sees the university growing.

"It [the university] started out to accommodate Acadiana. As the student body becomes more diverse, so does what UL Lafayette has to offer," stated DesOrmeaux.

DesOrmeaux also said she enjoys trivia, particularly on Sundays at the Bulldog and on Tuesdays at Hooter's. She once entered a trivia competition at Hooter's and made it to the finals at the French Quarter Hooter's in New Orleans. It occurred on Superbowl Sunday and she nearly won $600.

Finally, if she could change one thing at UL Lafayette, DesOrmeaux said, "I really think that we need free use of canoes in the Cypress Lake!"

ANNE ENGAMMARE

"You see people everyday in your classes of a different race or culture. I think that many people don't realize how precious that is and how much you can learn from somebody who wasn't born with the same skin color as you," stated Anne Engammare, a senior journalism major.

Another valuable aspect of college life that she thinks students overlook is campus involvement.

"People don't get involved because of the commuting problem," said Engammare. "There are dozens of organizations on campus they can get involved with, but people do not take advantage of this opportunity."

Engammare takes advantage of all opportunities that she can. She is active in the Alcohol and Safety Task Force, Sigma Gamma Mu, Phi Beta Delta, Association of Future Alumni, Society of Professional Journalists and The Vermilion.

"I like the opportunities it (UL Lafayette) gives," said Engammare. "If you want to do something, you can pretty much do it. When I came here I never thought I would one day work for the paper."

As editor-in-chief, Engammare said she believes that the paper is primarily for the students, but she has to keep in mind that the faculty and staff make up a large part of the readership.

"My main concern is the keeping students informed and involved," said Engammare. "I want them to realize that they are picking up The Vermilion because it is their newspaper."

While this responsibility is amazing for anyone, it is especially amazing for this Swiss native because English is not even her first language.

"I didn't have problems adjusting. I was never homesick," stated Engammare. "I think I fit in here, even though to a certain extent you are always off. I'm off in Europe because I'm too American, and here I am too European, but it suits me better. I have much more choices and opportunities."

And a busy life it is. After hitting the snooze button four or five times, Engammare jumps in the shower and watches a little CNN before jumping on her bike and pedaling to class, arriving right on time, but never early. If she makes it home by six in the evening, she considers that a "good day." She usually spends time in the afternoon working and tries to squeeze in a little time for her friends and boyfriend in the evenings.

As for her future, Engammare has one hope.

"I want to be happy," Engammare stated. "No matter if I made $150,000 or $50,000, I want to be happy. I want a family life, and I want a career. I'm not spending four years in college to spend the rest of my life at home."

"I enjoy cheering, I enjoy singing the fight song at the games, and I enjoy being on television."

PRINCESS WILLIS

How many people know that there is a Princess on campus? Ok, maybe she is not royalty, but her full name is Princess Von Gretchen Trinette Willis. Princess received her name from her mother who had always loved the name.

The original spark of interest came from her grandmother. She cleaned the house of a lady whose daughter was also named Princess. Ironically, that girl passed away on the same day that Willis was born. Even more ironic was the fact that Mrs. Willis did not find out until later that this coincidence had occurred. Von Gretchen was the name of a model that Princess' mother admired while living in Los Angeles, and Trinette means 'little Katherine.' Princess' mother is named Katherine.

If you should ever happen to walk by her residence hall door, you might hear Willis mimicking her television. Do not worry, she is only practicing. One day this mass communication/political science double major would like to work for CNN, so while watching television, she often turns on the captioning and reads what the news anchor says.

Willis' enthusiasm in the university shows in her involvement on campus. She keeps busy with the Student Government Association, Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc., Union Program Council, Gamma Beta Phi honor society, and she is a residence hall counselor in Denbo Hall.

Willis said she also enjoys UL Lafayette sports. Her favorites are football and basketball.

"I enjoy cheering, I enjoy singing the fight song at the games, and I enjoy being on television," claimed Willis. Despite her seemingly full schedule, Willis still finds time to work. She is employed at the clothing store Brother's.

Recently, Willis began claiming that the cafeteria was her favorite place. Because of to the improvements, she changed her meal plan to double the number of meals that she eats in the cafeteria each week. She said she is also quite excited about the renovations being make in Guillory Hall and the new ID card access for the dorms.

College is a time for students to make adjustments in their lives. The biggest challenge that Princess encountered was being on time.

"I underestimate the amount of time it takes to be somewhere," stated Willis. For other students, though, she feels that the hardest challenge is staying focused.

"Students need to learn how to balance their social life with their academic life so they can stay focused and excel in school," stated Willis.

STEVE JOHNSON

"(I enjoy) anything that makes me laugh that doesn't cause physical or emotional damage to anyone."

"I love people, and I love helping people."

"I enjoy the hell out of life," proclaimed Steve Johnson. "Life's too short not to enjoy it."

Majoring in accounting, Johnson will not commit to any long-term job plan yet because he has "a lot of learning and a lot of living left to do in life."

He is considering a job with an emphasis in accounting or business, possibly tax law or even politics because he said he needs a job that is interesting and changes on a daily basis.

"I love people, and I love helping people," said Johnson. "I'd like to be involved in politics, but at the same time, I only want to do it if I'm called to do it. I'd like the opportunity to make a difference and not be a stereotypical politician."

Johnson, currently serving in the SGA, has already experienced campaigning and elections. One of his funniest memories was campaigning during freshman elections.

"I went to the sorority houses dressed up in a full suit like a real politician," explained Johnson. "I had 'Hail to the Chief' playing when I walked in, and I had my friends dressed up like body guards with sunglasses and little wires in their ears, and they would talk into their sleeves. They had given baby dolls to some of the girls and I walked in and kissed the babies and gave a speech. It was a lot of fun."

Growing up in Lafayette, Johnson admitted that at first he wanted to go away to college, but said he is glad that he did not .

"I've had opportunities galore because I've been here. I like being treated as a person, " said Johnson I don't want to be known as a number, and truthfully I haven't felt like that yet."

While not on the campaign trail or in class, Johnson said he enjoys just having fun with his friends.

"(I enjoy) anything that makes me laugh that doesn't cause physical or emotional damage to anyone," Johnson said. He also teaches 10th grade catechism, which he considers to be the most important thing he does.

Asked what he considers to be a necessity for college life, Johnson said definitely not the $100 graphing calculator that the math professors require, but that an open mind is what students need.

Johnson hopes to stay in the South after he graduates.

"I like the South, people are so nice, and girls are prettier down here, that's for true," said Johnson.

Asked about goals for the future, Johnson immediately responded that he wants a family.

"I'd like to be good parent, and that's probably the most important thing I'll ever do," said Johnson. "I want to have a big family, three or four of my own, and adopt foreign kids."

Still a big kid himself, Johnson also wants to have his own action figure one day. So when your walking down the aisles of Toys 'R Us and your children beg for a toy that resembles the guy that sat behind you in statistics, it may actually be him!

Evenings at the Eiffel Tower, art classes in the Louvre, English classes in the cafes that entertained Hemingway and weekend trips to Germany. This is not what most students experienced in summer school, but for the 32 students who participated in the UL France Summer School Program, this was a reality.

For five weeks, students were emerged in French culture, living in Paris and exploring the French countryside. Once they mastered the French metro, students found their way to various French tourist attractions from Notre Dame to Disneyland Paris. Often tempted by the by the sweet smell of French bakeries and disgusted by the sour odors of the Metro, students quickly acclimated themselves with the Parisian way of life, living without air conditioning and ice cubes. The inexpensive wine helped to ease their discomfort.

"Everything I had heard about Paris, good and bad, was true, and the good parts have me wanting to go back real soon," admitted biology major Jeff Boos.

After spending their mornings in class, students were busy on class field trips or exploring with friends. The museum and metro strikes the first week of the trip made sight-seeing a bit more difficult, but students were never lacking in places to go and things to see.

The entire entourage went on several excursions to neighboring towns. Any trip to France is incomplete without visiting King Louis XIV's example of luxury and beauty, his palace at Versailles, so this was one of the first destinations. Students walked through the infamous Hall of Mirrors and enjoyed a sunny afternoon in palace's magnificent gardens.

"It was an incredible exercise in excess and self indulgence on behalf of King Louis XIV," remarked Kelly Cahill, biology major.

They also took a step back in time, exploring three castles in the Loire Valley. The first castle, the Chateau d'Amboise, was home to several royal families and the Saint Hubert Chapel on the castle's grounds houses the tomb of Leonardo da Vinci. The Chateau Royal de Blois was the next stop. Here students inspected 13th - 17th century French architecture. They also visited Chenoceau Chateau, the home of Catherine da Medicis.

Before leaving the land of wine and roses, the students also journeyed to Giverny. They strolled along the petal-covered paths in Monet's gardens and stood on the bridge from which he painted his masterpiece "Waterlillies."

During the six weeks, students had two extended weekends during which they were free to travel to other countries. Some adventurous students headed east to Switzerland and The Netherlands to enjoy the numerous outdoor activities and party spots. Others boarded a train for an all-night ride to Barcelona to experience bullfights and beaches. A few lucky ones made it to Italy.

"Anybody who goes on the trip should definitely take the time to go to Rome and see the Pope. It is something I will never forget. It made the whole trip worthwhile," said Renee Gauthier, nursing major.

Some students chose to stay in France and enjoy the tranquility of the French Riviera, and still others toured the beaches in Normandy, on which their fellow Americans fought so bravely in World War II.

"Seeing actual World War II debris and bomb craters in Normandy and walking through a Nazi concentration camp in Germany offered invaluable learning experiences which I will treasure forever," expressed business major Kyle Bacon.

After finals and a banquet to conclude the stay in Paris, most of the students traveled to London. At night they enjoyed the extensive variety of quality theater and toured the city's highlights during the day. Westminster Abbey, Buckingham Palace and Abbey Road were just a few of the places they visited. Several students enjoyed the once-a-year clearance sale at Harrods and an all-day concert in the park with the Barenaked Ladies and Van Morrison. After a week in London, most of the students boarded a plane to return home to friends, family, good food and a familiar language.

You may have noticed the flyers with the slogan "See Europe if you will, but See America First" advertising a unique way to attend summer school around campus last spring. The Southwest Summer School Program is perfect for students who want to enjoy their summer but also attend summer school. The program combines studying history in a classroom and actually visiting the places where history was made.

"I went on the trip because I liked the idea of experiencing history instead of just studying it," said Jennifer Malinsky.

Participants spent a total of three weeks with UL Lafayette professor Robert Carriker in a classroom (two weeks before the trip and one week after) learning about their many destinations. The group then embarked on a three week trip visiting places like Colorado, Utah and Nevada.

"The point was to see 3000 years of history in America, and for the students to realize that Indian and Spanish histories are part of our history," said Carriker, who also happens to be the program director.

The program is considered full-time summer school. Students receive credit for History 395, Introduction to Public History and History 371, History in the Southwest. The cost of $2,400 includes summer school tuition, transportation, lodging, activities and meals.

During the summer of 1999, 10 students became the first at the university to participate in the program. The group left Louisiana in a 15-passenger van on June 3 and traveled through Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Arizona and Nevada, returning on June 24.

On a typical day they would leave the hotel around 8 am and either explore the city they were in or drive to the next city on the schedule. Some highlights of the trip included visiting the Georgia O'Keefe Museum in Santa Fe, N. M., white-water rafting in Durango, Colo., seeing magician Lance Burton in Las Vegas and seeing the Grand Canyon in Arizona.

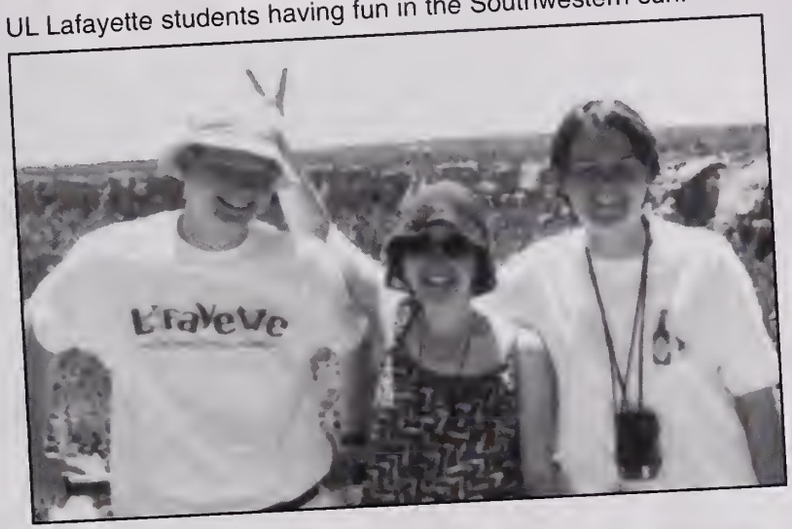

"I decided to participate because people in Louisiana don't travel very much. The program gave me the opportunity to see the Southwest with Dr. Carriker, who knew the best places to go. I didn't realize how beautiful America is. I especially enjoyed visiting Bryce Canyon in Utah, because it was really beautiful, and I had never seen mountains before," said participating student Jeremy Dotson.

Although the program will not be offered for the summer of 2000, it will return in 2001. One definite change will be flying from Louisiana to New Mexico instead of driving.

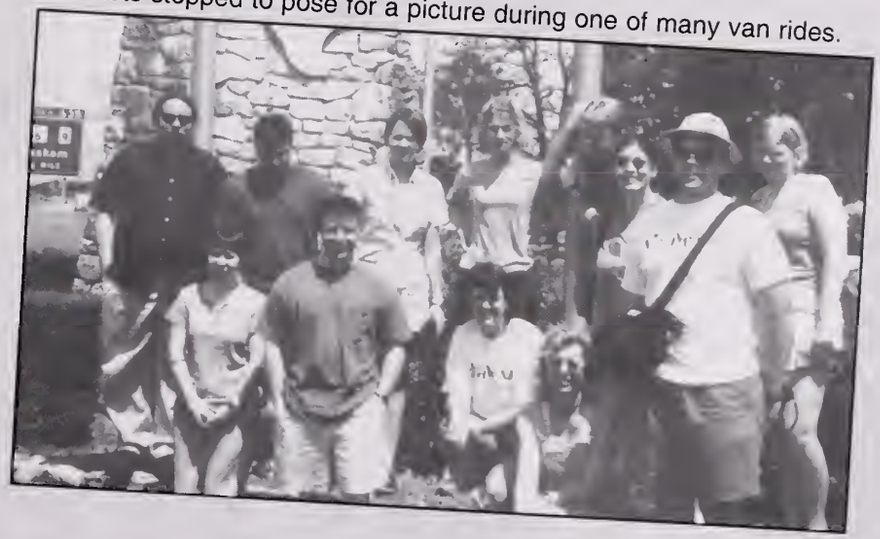

"It was the most fun and rewarding experience I've had as a teacher. I can't wait to do it again," said Carriker.

RACHEL WHITTINGTON

Be careful, if you blink you might miss this girl. Rache Whittington is always on the move.

Originally from Lafayette, Whittington is a junior major ing in Francophone studies with a double minor in Spanish anc journalism.

Whittington is involved in a variety of school activities Her UL Lafayette activities include being a 'big sis' for the Honors Program. She is a member of the Society o Professional Journalists, Phi Beta Delta International Society Alpha Lambda Delta and Phi Eta Sigma honors societies. She is also the current features editor at The Vermilion.

Whittington also takes part in many community activi ties. She is a lecture and commentator at St. Patrick's Catholic Church. She is a dance instructor at DeLarue Dance Center Whittington is attempting to create a journalism program for middle school students in the French Immersion Program.

She has taken time away from all these activities to travel abroad. Whittington has studied at the Université Ste Anne for five weeks during the summer of her freshman year She also received a CODOFIL scholarship that allowed her to study at Université Mans--Hainaut in Belgium during the sum mer of 1999.

Whittington's favorite teacher since she has been at UL Lafayette is Ian Kinsella. Whittington said that the hardest course she has ever taken at UL Lafayette was French 401.

"The class is demanding, but very rewarding," Whittington said. "You have to take what you know of the French language and the French history and apply it to the novel and the characters in the novel."

"I love it, I really do, I don't know anything else I'd like better," Whittington said about her major in Francophone studies. Perhaps she would rather be doing one of her many hob bies.

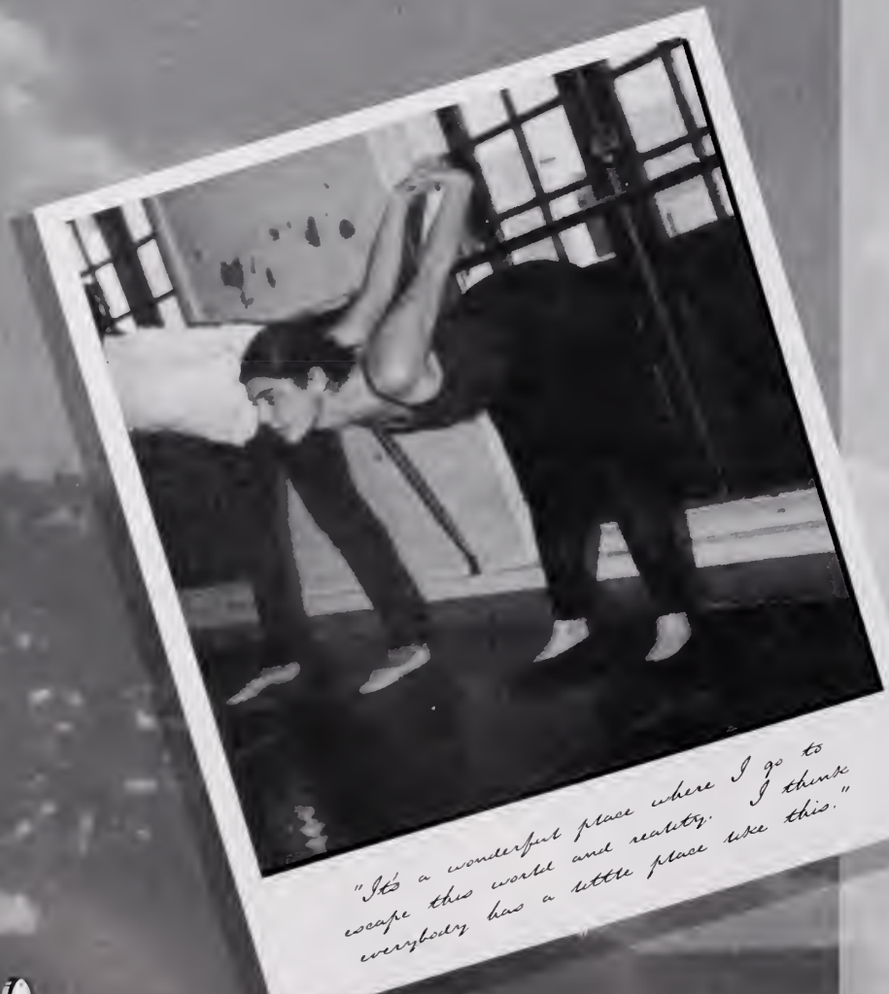

She enjoys dancing, playing the piano, swimming laps, riding her bike, rollerblading, swinging in the park, drawing, cro cheting and cross-stitching.

She is also learning a few new hobbies. Her mother is teaching her to knit and her grandfather is teaching her how to carve wood.

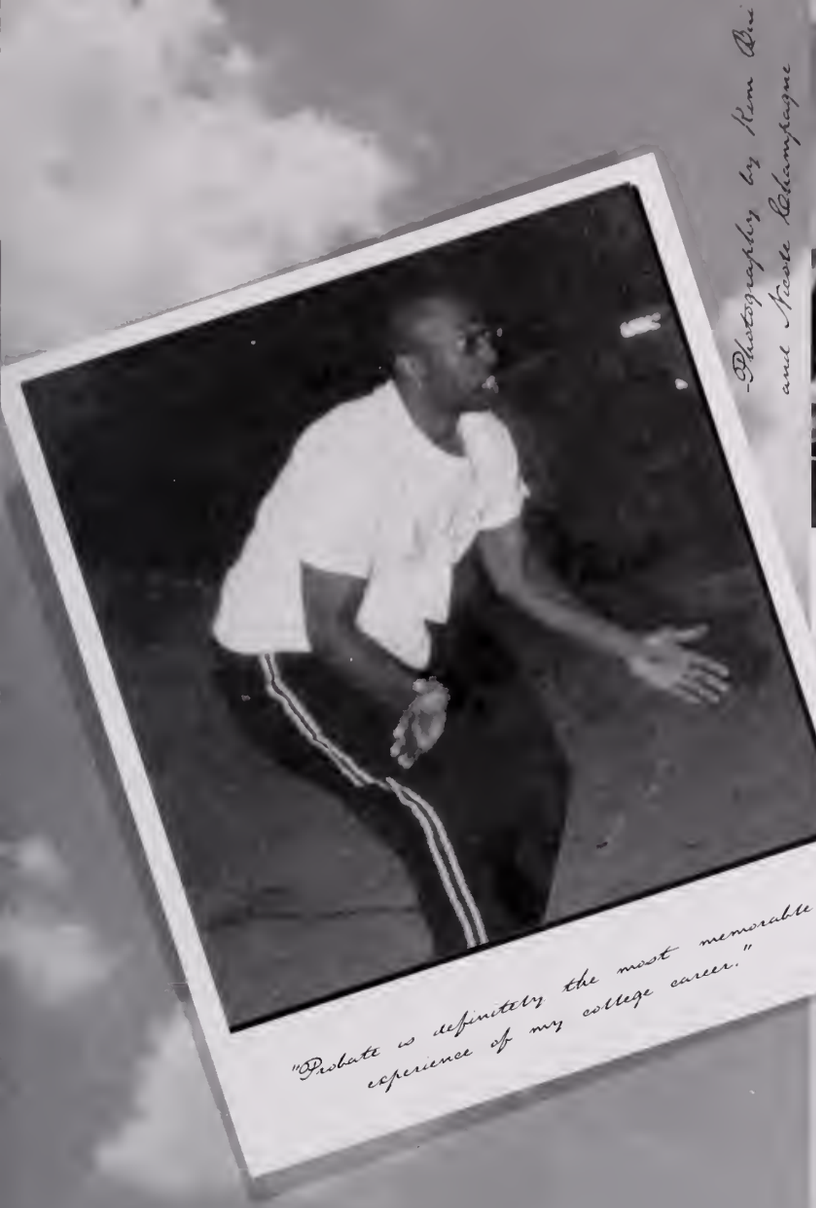

Whittington said that the things that a college student needs most to survive are "peace of mind, time for yourself, and a computer." Whittington gets her time to herself at her favorite place, a little clearing in the woods by the Vermilion River near her home.

"It's a wonderful place where I go to escape this world and reality. I think everybody has a little place like this," Whittington said.

AARON HINKSTON

If Aaron Hinkston III were ever given the chance to build anything he wanted anywhere on campus, he would build a tree house.

"I'd find me a big oak tree somewhere and build a nice big tree house with a lock on it and a ladder I could pull up, where I could get away," said Hinkston.

Hinkston came to UL Lafayette from the city of Alexandria, La. He is a senior majoring in architecture. UL Lafayette's architecture program was what attracted him to the university. Hinkston knew going into college that he wanted to study architecture and looked into six different universities in Louisiana and Texas. A five-year architecture program was the degree Hinkston wanted to earn.

"What it pretty much came down to is UL offered me the best package for the five-year program," stated Hinkston.

Hinkston is very involved on campus. He currently serves as the president for the College of the Arts in the Student Government Association. He is also the president of the Student Arts Council, as well as a founder of the organization. Hinkston is the treasurer of his fraternity, Alpha Phi Alpha, Inc., which he said has provided him with great memories of college.

"Probate is definitely the most memorable experience of my college career," said Hinkston. This was a week when the new members of the fraternity are shown off to the campus.

When relaxing in between classes, Hinkston likes to mingle in the student union. When he feels like being alone, Fletcher Hall is the place where he will find solitude. Although he denies ever sleeping the entire night at Fletcher Hall, Hinkston admitted that he has, on four occasions, stayed at Fletcher Hall for 24 hours straight.

He said he believes that some of the biggest problems on campus deal with lack of school spirit and unity. Also, that our school has long been overlooked as one of the premier universities in Louisiana, even though we have some of the best degree programs in the state.

Despite his busy schedule, he still occasionally finds time to relax in front of a movie.

Living in the Conference Center Residence Hall, Hinkston frequently eats in the cafeteria, enjoying his favorites, red beans and rice and lasagna.

If his friends could describe Hinkston in only one word, he said he believes it would be something like dedicated.

Finally, when asked what his favorite class was, he had to smile and laugh a little.

"If I had a favorite," he joked, "it would have to be my studio class."

BRANNON BONHOMME

Most students go to college to better themselves, and sometimes this includes helping to better others in the process. Brannon Bonhomme was able to do just that while fulfilling his duties in the National Guard.

"I am a petroleum supply specialist," said Bonhomme. "I drive the fuel trucks. It's dangerous; I don't like it. I'm trying to find a National Guard band in the area."

Being in a military band has taken Bonhomme several places. According to him, the farthest place he has ever traveled was to Haiti.

"We played for moral support and to let people know we were okay and that we weren't there to hurt them. We were there to help," said Bonhomme, of the eye-opening experience.

"It showed me a new appreciation on life. There is so much poverty there. There is no middle class," he explained. "You're either poor or you're rich. There is no in between. The rich people would be like us now. It made me appreciate what we have here even more."

Bonhomme revealed that his favorite college memory is playing in the New Orleans Superdome when the Ragin' Cajun football team played Tulane.

"I remember back in grade school," related Bonhomme, "my high school band went over there, and I always wanted to be in the band. They were out there in the field and I was like 'yeah, that's what I want to do.' So that was an impressionable moment for me, and I knew that was something I wanted. I finally got to do that. It was cool!"

Bonhomme said that he believes that lack of direction is the biggest problem for college students today.

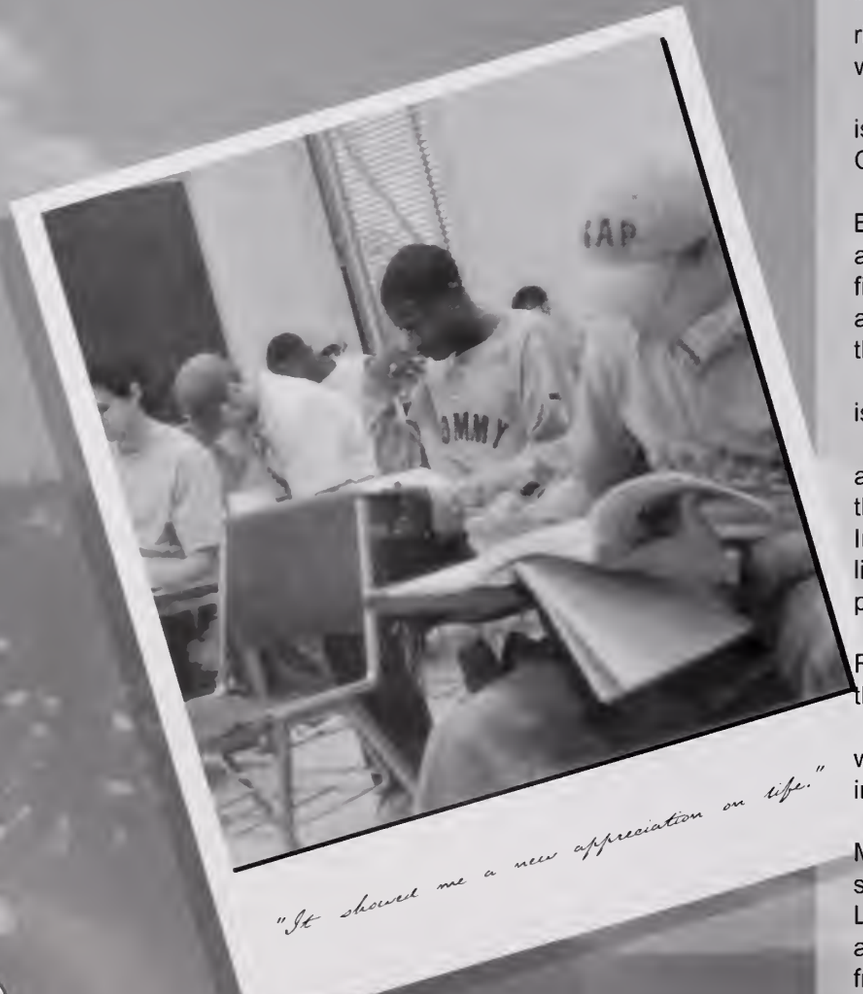

"The direction that the world is going, everything is about money," said Bonhomme. "You have kids today, and all they are really thinking about is how they can make a dollar. Instead, they should be thinking about how they can make their life better, how they can live happily. I think that is a serious problem; money isn't really happiness."

Bonhomme seems to have all of the qualities of a Ragin' Cajun, including the talent of getting a parking ticket on the first day of school.

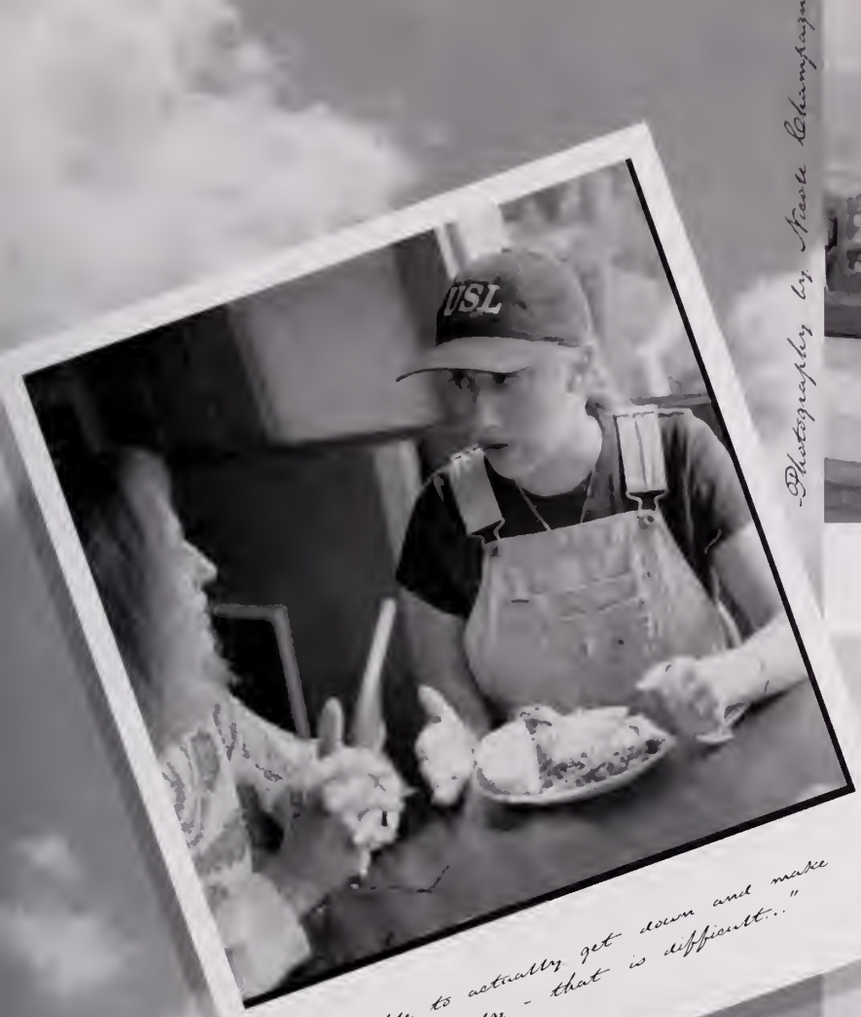

He doesn't believe in giving excuses either. Asked what the most creative excuse he ever gave a teacher for missing class, he replied, "I don't give excuses. I have no excuse."

From Cade, La., Bonhomme graduated from St. Martinville High School and now is a full-time student here studying music education. Bonhomme plays trumpet in the UL Lafayette jazz ensemble and the marching band. His hobbies are listening to music, conversing with friends and learning from his elders.

E L I S T A I S T R E

Elista Istre was drawn to UL for the same reason that many students are.

"I like Southern Louisiana - I like the culture here" Istre stated. Having grown up in the area, UL Lafayette was also the local choice.

Some of Istre's favorite memories of college stem from working with the International Student Organization for the university. Through the International Office, Istre was able to help out the international students and welcome them as they started school here.

Elista said she believes that the toughest thing about college is the distractions that she sees as roadblocks to the goal of earning a degree for college students today.

"To be able to actually get down and make yourself study - that is difficult if friends call you up and say, 'hey, why don't we go do this,' and it's tempting to just go with them," she said.

This senior will be leaving the university in May having earned a degree in history and a minor in Spanish and business, as well as having traveled throughout Europe.

Countries that Istre has had the opportunity to visit include Egypt, Israel, Greece, Turkey, Mexico, Spain and Ireland. She was also able to study and take classes in Spain.

If she could choose any place in the world that she would still like to visit, she said it would have to be Italy.

Despite her active travels, Istre still has time for extracurricular fun. Her on-campus organizations include Chi Alpha; Pi Gamma Mu, in which she serves as president; Phi Beta Delta in which she serves as vice president; Phi Alpha Theta and Gamma Beta Phi.

After graduation Istre said she would like to return to Spain. While probably not on a permanent basis, she would like to return at least to visit and possibly to live for a year or so.

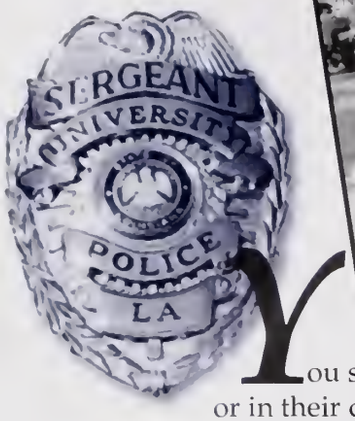

While still in town, though, you can always find her at home on Sunday evening. It is a family tradition of sorts for the Istre family to gather on Sunday evenings. They make homemade pizza and watch movies together.

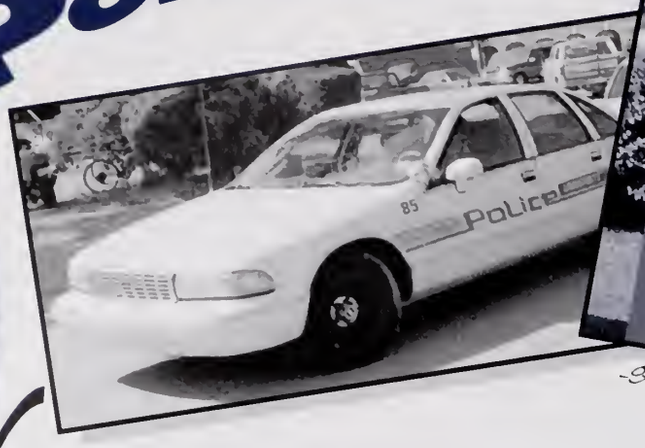

While not concerned about the coming of the new milennium, Istre said she does feel that it will be something special. She also said she likes the idea of graduating in the centennial class.

"To be graduating in the [new] millennium is exciting. To be part of the centennial class and the millennium class is pretty neat," stated Istre.

University Police

Police Chief Joey Sturm outside the campus police station.

-Photography by Will Blackman

You see these guys almost everywhere you go, whether they are on bicycles checking things out or in their cars driving around making sure things are safe. They are our University Police headed by Police Chief Joey Strum. They are here 24 hours a day, seven day a week, to make sure everything runs smoothly here on the campus of The University of Louisiana at Lafayette.

The main purpose of the University Police is to provide a safe environment through a sensitive measured approach to all situations requiring police assistance in support of the mission of the university and the office of student affairs.

To be a part of the University Police, all officers must go through a pretty heavy screening process. This includes a written paper, oral board interview, background investigation, psychological screening, physical fitness test, drug screening and medical exam.

Once they become apart of the University Police, they must undergo training at a police academy and obtain a Louisiana Peace Officer and Standards Training certification by the state. While in the academy, the officers must maintain and graduate with an 80 percent or better grade point average.

After the academy, they go through field training for 12 weeks before they are released on their own. In addition, many officers undergo specialized training throughout their careers. Many full-time officers are instructor certified in most fields in law enforcement.

Currently the department employs 54 officers overall, eight female and 42 males.

According to Chief Sturm, the qualities that are necessary to be a good officer are honesty, integrity, excellent communication skills, "someone willing and wanting to help" solve problems.

The department offers different police services to the university community, such as police vehicle patrol, bicycle patrol and foot patrol, as well as static post-positions at two off-campus satellite facilities.

The department also offers specific functions to the community via its Community Relations and Crime Prevention Unit. This includes everything from safety and security talks in residence halls to bicycle safety classes for students' children in Family Housing.

"We recently held a bicycle safety class for children at Cajun Village in conjunction with the Housing Department," said Sturm. "The kids learned valuable safety skills. In addition, two bicycles and helmets were given away as door prizes to a lucky little girl and a lucky little boy!"

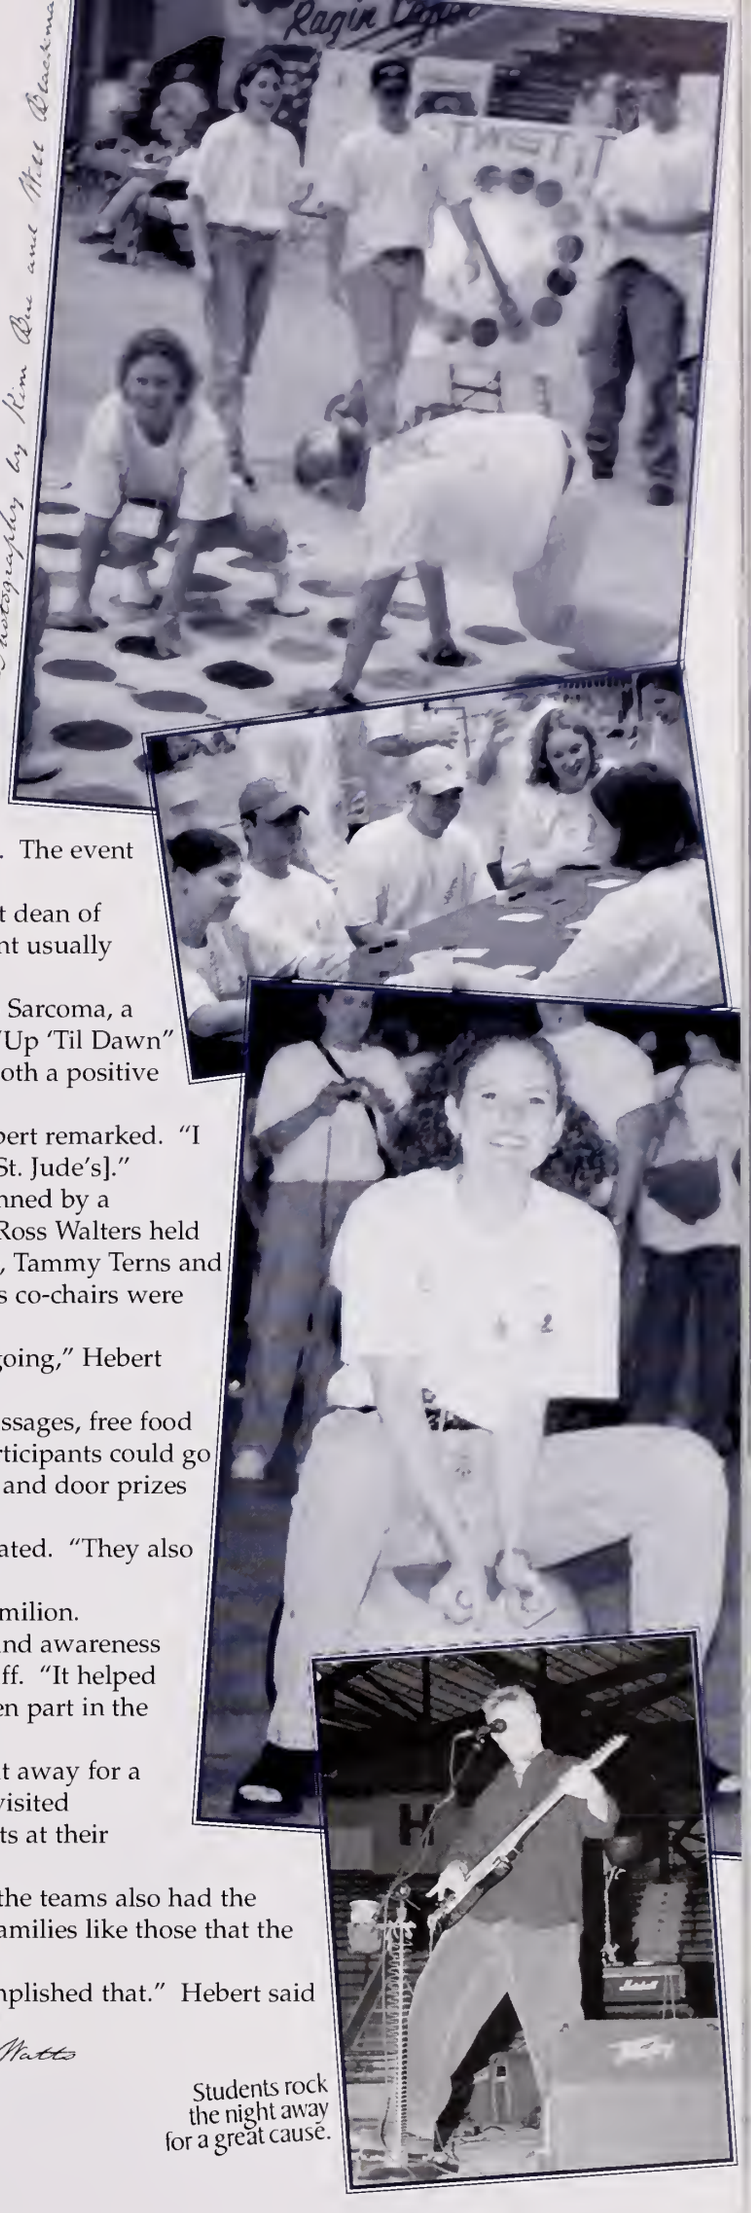

The department also has student officers. According to Sturm, student officers are better able to relate to the student population it serves.

"The program is a basic tenant of which I believe is part of the community policing concept," said Sturm. "A department must have officers that are a representation of its community. Gender, race, and age are all factors associated."

The department is also planning goals for the future. They want to expand the Code Blue Emergency Call Box stations as well as cameras for surveillance of parking lots to deter car burglaries. They also want to convert the department's current report writing system to a laptop system whereby officers can do their reports on the road where a presence is always there, as opposed to doing them on computers at the office.

It was a night of fun and excitement, a night when students got together and partied until dawn, and they did it for a good cause.

UL Lafayette was the first university in the state to host "Up 'Til Dawn," a philanthropic activity that benefits St. Jude Children's Hospital. The event took place on April 7 at Blackham Coliseum.

"I think the students enjoyed it quite a bit," said Troy Hebert, assistant dean of Grek affairs. "We raised $25,000 in two and a half months when this event usually takes a year to plan."

Hebert was once a patient at St. Jude who was being treated for Osteo Sarcoma, a type of bone cancer which is now in full remission. He heard about the "Up 'Til Dawn" program at a conference and decided to present it to UL Lafayette from both a positive press perspective and a philanthropic perspective.

"I decided that it was something that I wanted to do on campus," Hebert remarked. "I just always wanted to do something big, something to really help them [St. Jude's]."

This intense night of silliness, laughter and emotion was carefully planned by a committee of seven students. The executive director was Jamie Dupuis, Ross Walters held the finance chair, the catering on location chairperson was Julie Plaisance, Tammy Terns and Angie Thomassee were the fund-raising co-chairs and the public relations co-chairs were Alice Deal and Kristina Arrieta.

"This exceptional group of students helped put it together and get it going," Hebert said. "It was a fun time."

This huge slumber party of sorts was enhanced by live music, free massages, free food and drinks and friendly competition. There was even a casino where participants could go to win funny money to obtain prizes. Throughout the night the activities and door prizes were carefully spaced to a time when people would begin to tire.

"Spirit points were awarded for morale and participation," Hebert related. "They also got points for raising money and attending community projects."

The team who was awarded the most point for the event was The Vermilion.

"It was uplifting to know that we were helping to raise both money and awareness for something like that," said Jason Pugh, a member of The Vermilion staff. "It helped make us aware of how precious life is and how lucky we are to have taken part in the first one of these in the state."

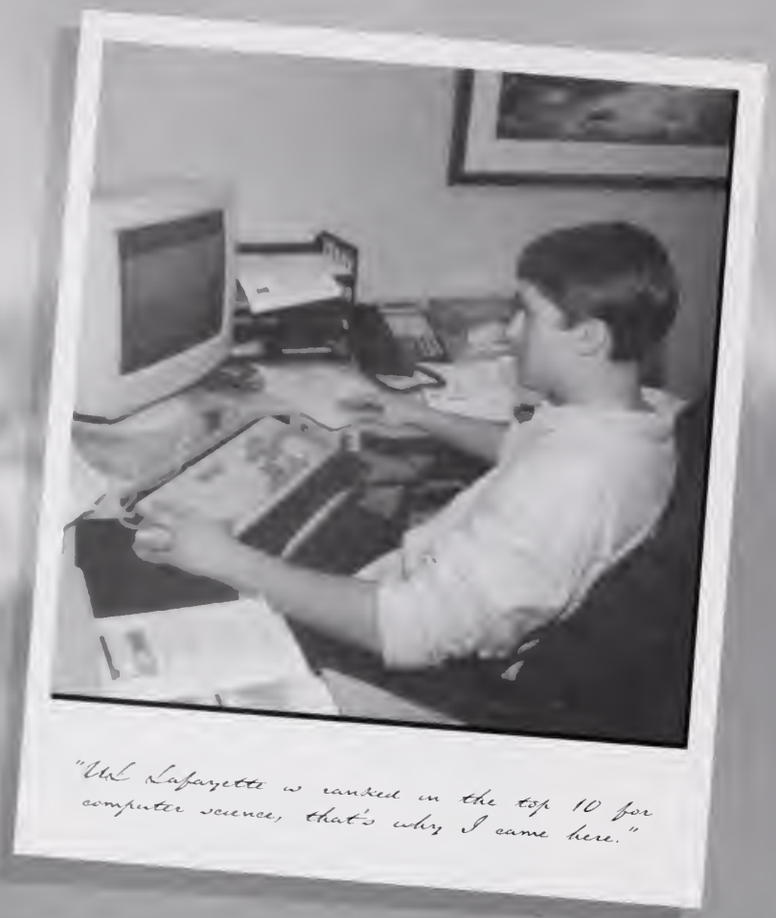

UL Lafayette students were not the only college kids to party the night away for a noble cause. New Mexico State and Texas Christian University students visited Blackham to gain knowledge of how to plan future "Up 'Til Dawn" events at their schools.

In addition to the fun and games that the evening event consisted of, the teams also had the opportunity to hear the stories of patients and their families. It was for families like those that the students and faculty worked so hard to help.

"We had two goals. The first goal was to raise over $20,000; we accomplished that." Hebert said proudly. "Our second goal was to have at least 30 teams; we had 43."

FRANK LASKOWSKI

Frank Laskowski III is a senior computer science major who knows where he is going in life.

"UL Lafayette is ranked in the top 10 for computer science," stated Laskowski, "that's why I came here." In addition, Laskowski has lived here for a good part of his life.

He did not always live in Lafayette. His father's job moved the family to the Netherlands and eventually to New Orleans for about five years. He has lived in Lafayette ever since he entered high school as a freshman.

Laskowski has gathered many experiences around the world. He stated that his favorite place he ever visited was Greece, specifically the island of Crete. The one place that he would someday like to visit would be in Asia, most likely in Taiwan.

On campus, Frank's favorite place to relax is the Honors' lounge. He enjoys kicking back on the couches while munching away on the free popcorn. Like many students, Laskowski keeps a very busy schedule. In addition to his 20 hours of class, he also participates in Judo. Though just beginning with judo, he is very advanced in Tae Kwon Do. He is a third-degree black belt and a certified instructor in Tae Kwon Do. He actually teaches classes in it as well as karate aerobics. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, he returns to his high school to help out with the wrestling team.

In addition to Tae Kwon Do, Laskowski enjoys activities like swimming, surfing and water skiing. He attributes this to living near the water for most of his life. Once he graduates, Laskowski said he would like to remain near the water. His top three choices of places to move are California, Florida and Ohio, but he stated that he has no real preference, except to go where the jobs are.

If you should ever walk into Frank's room, you would immediately spot his big Budweiser beer neon sign.

"It definitely lightens up the room," said Laskowski. "[It] feels like a power drain every time you turn it on and you hear this buzz. You can't do anything else while it's on though; you can't read or study."

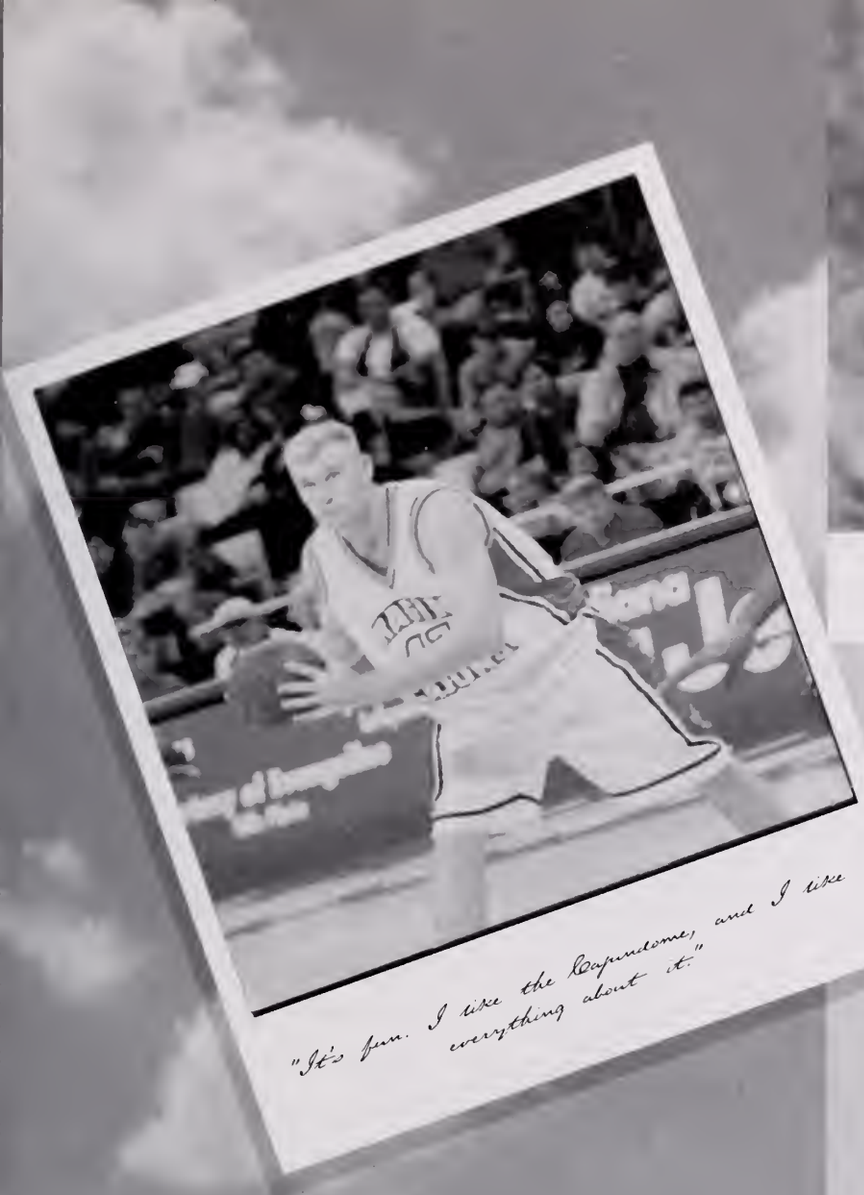

Finally, despite sampling food all over the world, his favorite food comes from right here in Louisiana.

"My favorite food is crawfish - spicy - has to be hot," said Laskowski. "Hot enough to where your fingers are numb and your nose is running. And the atmosphere has to be good - eating it outside on a table with newspaper, music playing, and plenty dancing."

BRETT SMITH

If his height and bleach-blonde hair do not make him stand out, then Brett Smith's accent will. It is hard to miss this 6-foot-9 center/forward from Toongabbie, New South Wales, Australia.

Smith, a junior majoring in business management, has been in Louisiana since coming as an exchange student his senior year in high school. It was here at Walker High School in Baton Rouge that he first caught the eye of Ragin' Cajun recruiters.

"It was between UL Lafayette or Southern Mississippi, and since UL Lafayette wasted no time, I accepted the offer," replied Smith.

Smith settled in here and has been an integral part of the basketball team ever since. He said he has enjoyed playing ball here and described his most memorable moment on the court when he hit a three-point shot against VCU at the buzzer his freshman year, even though it did not count.

"It's fun. I like the Cajundome, and I like everything about it," said Smith. "I am glad to be here."

Even though basketball is such a major part of his life, Smith has other goals he would like to achieve.

"My first goal is to graduate and get my degree," stated Smith. "Then I want to play professional basketball back in Australia."

Smith said he enjoys being here, but he cannot help missing his family back in Australia. No matter how busy he is, and as a student athlete he stays very busy, he takes time out to call his family.

"An average day for me is very busy. I wake up, go to class, practice, study hall and then back home to study or sleep," said Smith. "It may seem like you have all the time in the world, but when you have things keeping you busy day after day, there really is no time at all."

Do not let him fool you though, Smith still finds time to relax and have fun. He enjoys listening to music and surfing the web, especially his favorite web site, The Ragin' Cajun sports page. You may also be able to spot him eating at his favorite restaurant, Damon's, or partying with all the other college students on the weekends at the strip.

DANCIN' The Night Away...

The performing arts department was especially busy this year, working on its annual shows, as well as special performances for the centennial celebrations.

The performing arts department was a major part of the Centennial Spectacular. Dancers joined actors in a segment that included excerpts from "Basically Broadway." The dancers also provided a video and performed a live action dance sequence that interpreted the words of the first president of the university, Edwin L. Stephens.

The centennial festivities also included The Camellia Pageant. This pageant was a tradition on UL Lafayette's campus from 1934-1962. The theme of the pageant was "That's Entertainment," which featured dancers, actors and singers from the performing arts department and musicians from the music department.

An Evening of Dance is often generalized as the department's fall dance concert. This year's performance featured UL Lafayette dance students' original choreography. It included ballet, modern, jazz and other styles of dance.

The State of La Danse 2000 was not just any spring dance concert, it allowed the performing arts department to celebrate the new millennium in its own way. The concert was a tribute to Marc Breaux, a former UL Lafayette student and Carencro native who made it big. Breaux worked on the choreography of such films as "Mary Poppins," "The Sound of Music," "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang" and others. A choreographer, dancer, director, actor and model, Breaux has also worked on and acted in several Broadway productions.

The State of La Danse 2000 contained original choreography from the dance faculty and student performances. The production also included a variety of dance numbers which provided a retrospect on Breaux's career.

Dance at UL Lafayette is included in the performing arts department that is headed by Stephen Taft. The coordinator of dance is Kenneth Jenkins. The theater and dance aspects of the performing arts department often team up in projects throughout the year.

Engineering Day

Photography by Kim Kui

Engineering students show off their hard work and creativity.

"I like having a hectic life."

JACIE LILLIE

Jacie Lilly is a native of Lafayette. She grew up here and graduated in 1996 from St. Thomas More. She is now a senior at UL Lafayette majoring in electrical engineering with a focus in telecommunications.

"I've always wanted to be a math teacher," said Lillie.

Her father, who is also an electrical engineer, helped convince her to choose a degree, such as engineering, that had a lot of math incorporated into it. She decided to focus in telecommunications after her father took her to a telecommunications conference. There she saw how quickly the telecommunications field is growing and how many opportunities for jobs it holds. After graduation this May, Jacie plans to move to Dallas to get a job designing telecommunications systems.

"I like to be busy because then I'm not bored," said Lilly. "I like having a hectic life."

The words busy and hectic definitely describe her life. During her four years here, she has been part of many campus organizations. As a member of Kappa Delta sorority, she served as the vice-president of National Panhellenic Council, the governing body of the sororities. Lillie also was in charge of rush one year and was on the orientation staff.

"Out of all the organizations that I was in, they [Kappa Delta] are the ones that wanted me to get involved and encouraged that," stated Lilly.

She was also the vice president last year and is the president this year of the Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers. She is in multiple honor societies including Rho Lamda, Order of Omega and Tau Beta Pi.

For some time Lillie thought she wanted to attend LSU, but she ultimately decided to attend UL Lafayette.

"I knew a lot of people here and out of the programs I looked at, they [UL Lafayette] have the best engineering program," said Lillie when asked why she chose this university. She also said she wanted to stay close to home because, "I like my parents too much [to leave]."

When she is not in class, Lillie works for Autocomm Engineering, a local engineering firm, where she does a variety of jobs. She also has been contracted by Exxon to do some documentation drawings for some of the telecommunications systems offshore. Throughout the week she also attends meetings for the many different organizations.

Finally, when Lillie does have time to herself, she would rather stay home and watch a movie than go out all night. And sleeping in on the weekends is always a treat.

"I get all kind of free stuff. I don't think I've ever paid for a drink in my life."

SHANNON CHOATE

The charming Shannon Choate sat at a table in Groucho's and smiled as she talked about her life.

"I've always been interested in helping people, actually it might just be being around people," Choate said about her major in child and family studies. "This was the best major because you can meet people and get to help them at the same time."

Choate enjoys reading and being around people, in fact she can be frequently found at The Bulldog in Lafayette and City Bar in Maurice. She is just like all the other girls her age, but instead of walking she cruises the campus in a wheelchair.

"Being in a wheelchair is not all that bad," Choate said. "I get all kind of free stuff. I don't think I've ever paid for a drink in my life," she laughed.

Choate has Cerebral Palsy. She was born three and a half months early. The umbilical cord was wrapped around her neck and she was not getting enough oxygen. Choate can walk with a walker, but does not do so at school because of the size of the campus.

Choate had a few embarrassing moments which she chose to share. She laughed as she recalled the evening at the movies when a few of her friends piled into Choate's van, which she nicknamed "the hoopty" to go watch "Fried Green Tomatoes." The evening was going well until the most emotional scene in the movie. This was also when the brake of Choate's wheelchair went off and she went flying down the isle. She came to an abrupt stop when she hit the first row of seats and was flung from her chair.

This Abbeville native chose to stay close to home to attend college and has never regretted it.

"I love it. I liked it from the first day I came," Choate said. "I didn't know that the people were going to be so friendly. They like to party.

Choate is involved with the orientation staff on campus and volunteers for the Lafayette grief center. Her favorite subject is English and Ian Kinsella is her most loved teacher.

After Choate graduates, she plans to attend Louisiana State University to earn her masters in social work. She said she wants to council families in crisis.

"I want to marry a rich man who wears a tie," Choate said about her future goals concerning family life. "I want to have children, but not give birth to them; maybe adoption or some serious epidural."

With all of her wit and determination, Choate will be able to reach all the goals in life that she sets for herself.

The End of a Journey...

Class of 1999

Graduates say goodbye to cherished friends and take with them a lifetime of memories.

The First Step Toward Your Dreams.

Class of 2000

"I want to graduate in engineering and if baseball doesn't work out, that's not the end of the world."

SCOTT DOHMANN

It is only fitting that Scott Dohmann would choose to pursue his college degree and collegiate baseball aspirations at a place where the athletic teams are nicknamed the Ragin' Cajuns.

That's because Dohmann has lived in seemingly every part of South Louisiana during the first 22 years of his life.

"I've lived in Arabie, Metairie, Kenner, Lafayette and Morgan City," said Dohmann, whose accent is tangible proof of a life lived solely in south Louisiana. "When people ask me where home is, it's funny. I get confused myself."

Dohmann's fastball, which tops out in the mid-90s, has caught the eye of more than one major league scout. However, Dohmann's commitment to handling both on-field and off-field responsibilities is what impresses his coach.

"We try to get them to understand that, if you don't succeed off the field, you won't succeed on the field," said UL Lafayette head coach Tony Robichaux, who has tutored Dohmann for more than three years. "He's a kid that takes care of his business. He goes to school and he represents your program the way you want him to."

While baseball played a major part in Dohmann's choice of where to attend college, the other love of his life did as well.

"I didn't really get a whole lot of offers (to play baseball) out of high school because I didn't have a really good senior year," said Dohmann, who prepped at St. Thomas More. "UL Lafayette was close to home, my family was here and I had a girlfriend, so that helped make decisions easier."

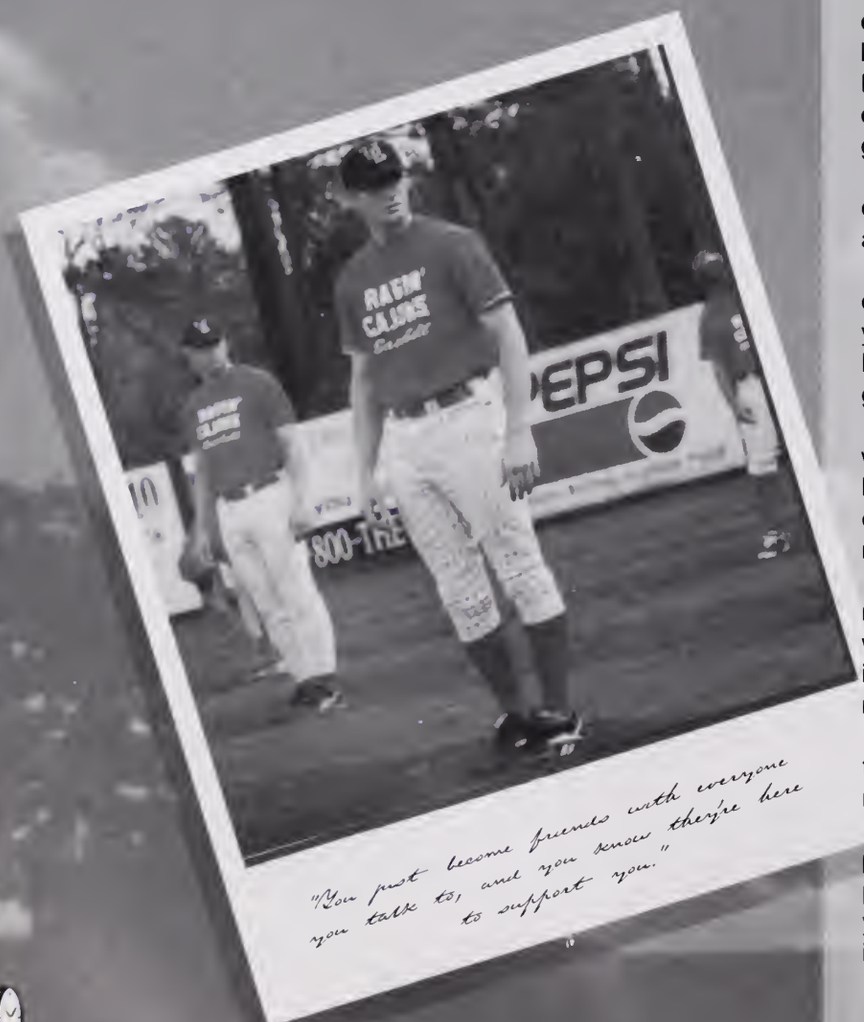

Being in a position to have his parents and his girlfriend watch most home games in the Moore Field stands played a key role in Dohmann's landing at UL Lafayette as did another opportunity that the university offered - a well-respected engineering department.

"I want to graduate in engineering and if baseball doesn't work out, that's not the end of the world," said Dohmann, who keeps a rosary his father received at a religious banquet in the pocket of his uniform pants. "I want to have a family to raise. And I want to raise them the way my parents raised me."

There is another reason Dohmann, who was tabbed as the Sun Belt Conference's No. 2 major league prospect, has responded to living and pitching in Lafayette.

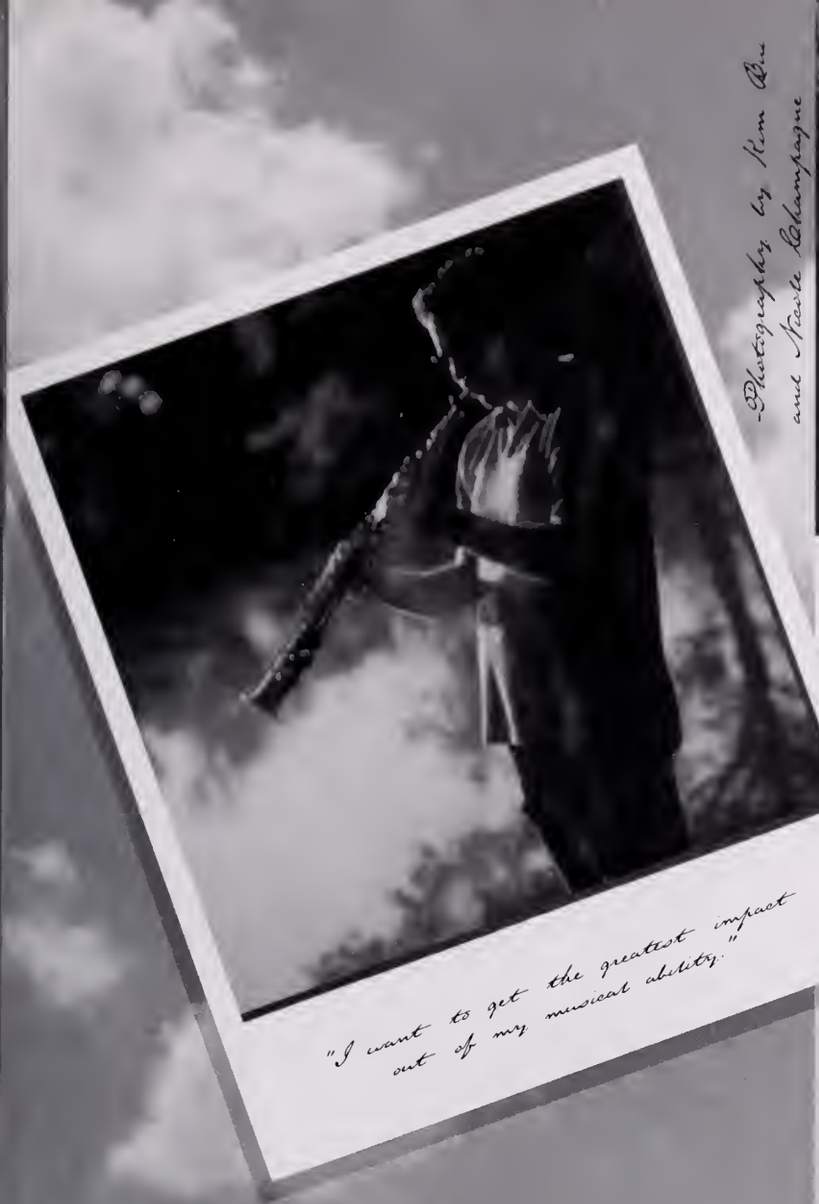

"You get to know your fans here and that's a really big part of the game," Dohmann said. "I've gotten to know so many people around here. You just become friends with everyone you talk to, and you know they're here to support you. So I definitely call here home."

For Scott Dohmann, that's not an easy thing to say.

"You just become friends with everyone you talk to, and you know they're here to support you."

DONOVAN HARMON

Few people are lucky enough to be able to turn a hobby or passion into a career. Donovan Harmon is one of these people.

Originally from Branch, La., this music major has dreams of one day becoming a pop music recording artist, and he recently received his first big break.

According to Harmon, UL Lafayette music teacher Susan Lein was composing some pieces for a movie soundtrack. She included a song that Harmon wrote and the writer of the movie chose his work over seven others.

"It could be a dream come true, but even if they decide not to use it, it's been an experience," said Harmon.

In the mean time, he is concentrating on earning his degree in music education.

"Actually I wasn't even going to college for music. I was coming for marine biology, but the band director my senior year in high school got me involved in a jazz band and put the idea in my head," stated Harmon. "He really pushed me and that's what I needed."

Harmon said he choose UL Lafayette because the location was good and he felt that the music department was strong.

"It's (the music department) good. There are a lot of good professors and there are improvements being made to the curriculum that need to be made," said Harmon.

He is especially impressed with professor Lein.

"She is one of those professors that will go the extra mile for you and she gets things done to help better the department," said Harmon. "She sets a good example for the students and helps them work through their problems."

Harmon started on the saxophone and now he plays piano, flute and even sings, which he admits he likes most of all.

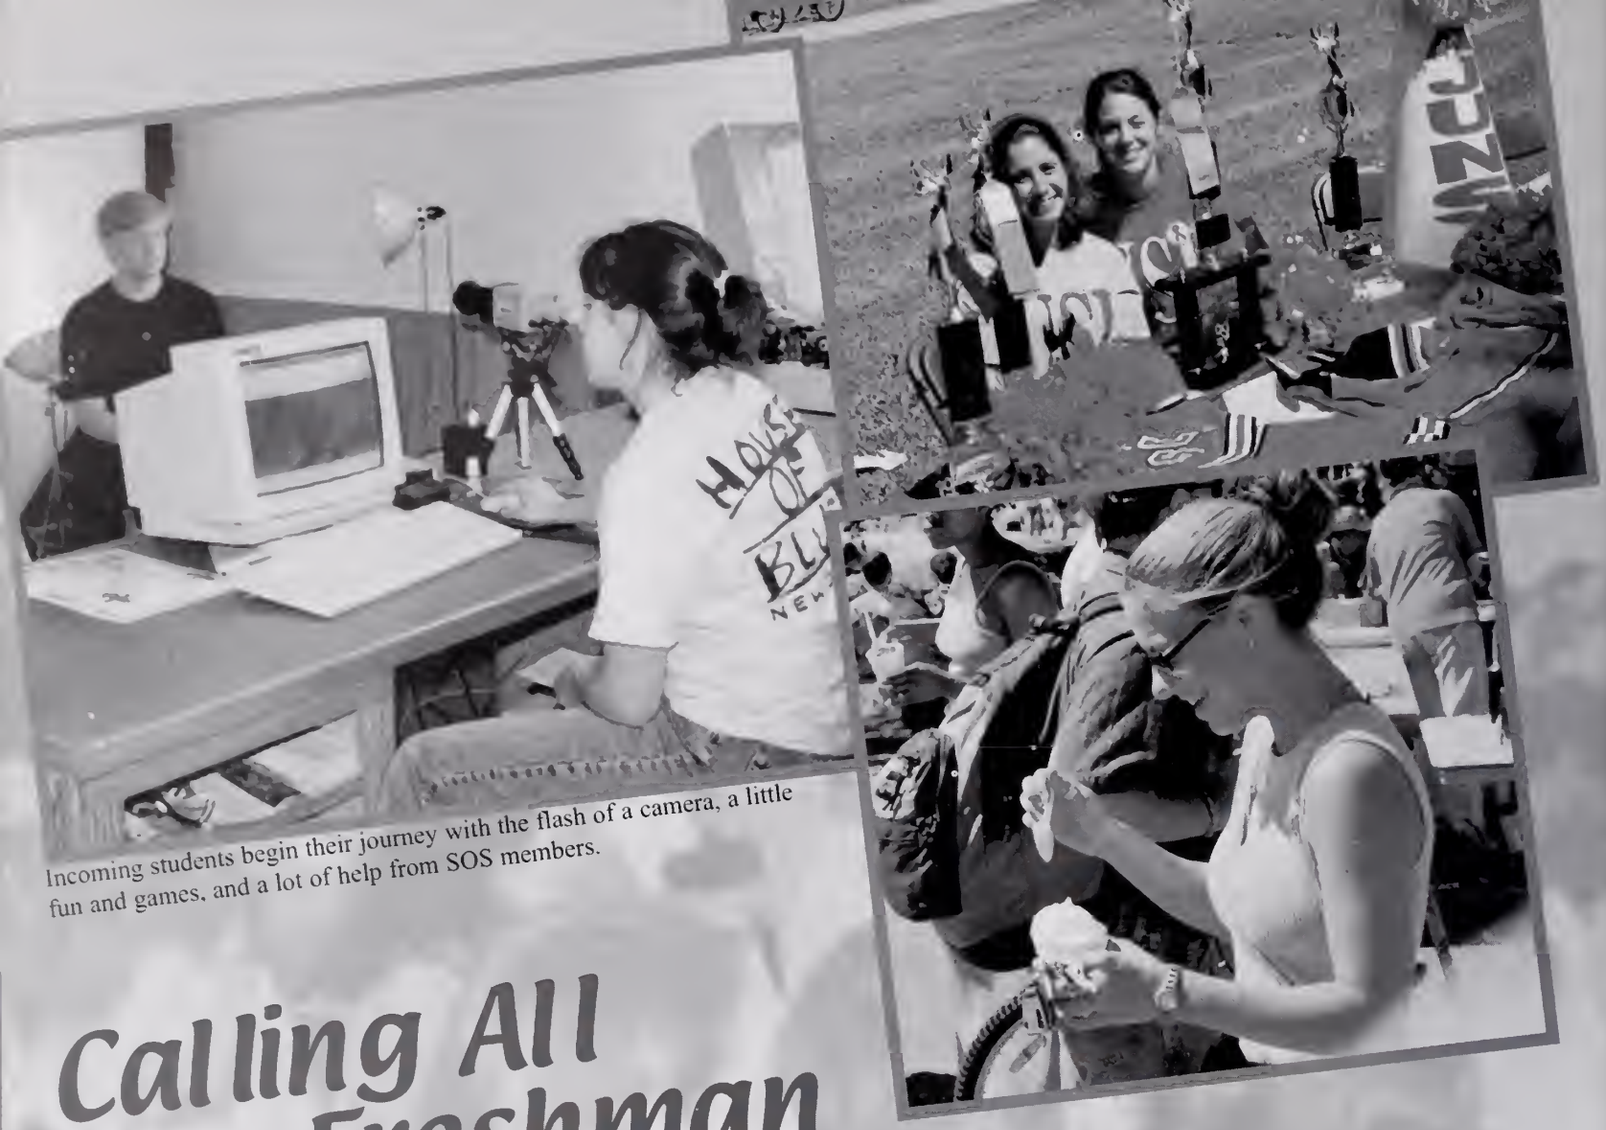

"I have to learn the basics of all instruments for my major, but I love singing most of all," said Harmon. "I'm working on my voice and writing some vocal songs. I can get more emotions through singing, there is something about words, they have more impact on people. That's what I want to do, I want to get the greatest impact out of my musical ability."

When he is not singing or playing an instrument, Harmon enjoys working out, playing basketball and taking care of his reef tank.

He said he believes God and family are the most important aspects of life, along with being true to yourself.

"God and family are definitely the most important. You have to be happy with what you are doing and happy with yourself. If you don't like yourself, no one else will."

Incoming students begin their journey with the flash of a camera, a little fun and games, and a lot of help from SOS members.

Calling All Freshman

The Student Orientation Staff (SOS) is a close, diverse group of students who render their services to help incoming freshman feel comfortable with UL Lafayette.

For orientations, SOS conducts several activities. There are ice breakers to help the students meet new people and tours to familiarize the students with the campus. There also are sessions to teach freshman how to go about choosing a major, read the catalogs, register for classes, learn to deal with roommates and how to adjust to college life overall.

"We're here to help the students transition from high school to college...to make them feel welcome, like they are part of the university," said Assistant Staff Director Mary Langley.

Through interviews conducted by Langley, Director of Enrollment Services Christi Moore and appointed staff directors (usually those who have been on staff before and are interested in playing leadership roles), SOS members are chosen. There are no specific criteria or standards that must be met in order to qualify for the staff. These are kind-hearted people who devote an enormous amount of time giving back to freshman what they once experienced.

"I'd heard it was a fun thing to do...and it was," replied staff member Annie Wingate.

The unique thing about this organization is that all of these students volunteer their time. They dedicate thousands of hours to this cause. Moore estimated that 7,000 hours of service are volunteered by SOS, or peer advisors as she referred to them, each orientation session, with most of the work days beginning at 5:30 a.m.

"It's the hardest job you'll ever love," as Langley put it.

The main purpose of the SOS is to make UL Lafayette feel like home to the freshman. They want to give the impression that this is the school for them, and it is a fun place to be. Wingate believes their main purpose is to create a sense of spirit and a good atmosphere.

SOS is all about making freshman feel like they are a part of the university and making positive impacts on lives.

As everything, SOS has its benefits. It teaches you responsibility and patience, how to work with a variety of people. It also allows you to make a difference.

The SOS was established in 1978 when, under Dean Blanco, Micheal Olivier attended a conference in California and returned with the ideas of students orienting students and including games and activities for fun. Then, basically whoever showed up on orientation day to help received a T-shirt and was on staff for the day. The program was run this way until Jimmy Clarke, Dean of Personnel in 1981, became involved and helped develop a sense of pride and professionality.

"I spent most of my time developing strength," Clarke stated. During his years he began the interviews of both staff members and directors, the application procedure, as well as the training sessions. Clarke is the foundation of the existing SOS today. With his contributions, diversity being the most important to him, he created a successful organization. Pam Stroup is now in Dean Clarke's position keeping the program alive and well.

International Coffee Hour

"The students get together, they make friends, that's it," said Brasad Komaravolu, who helps organize International Coffee Hour.

"Of all the programs we offer, the greatest response comes from Coffee Hour," said Komaravolu. On average, 125 to 150 students and faculty fill the lobby of the office of International Student Affairs every Friday at 4:30 p.m. Refreshments are served, games are played, and door prizes are awarded.

"We used to come here for Coffee Hour. It was nice, so we wantedto find a job here and be associated with it," said Komaravolu. He and Sunil Seru, both international students from India, met and became friends at UL Lafayette and work together to plan the Friday afternoon socials.

The duo is responsible for obtaining donations of food and prizes and organizing fun activities for students to participate in during Coffee Hour.

Students from a variety of countries attend Coffee Hour. They come from diverse cultures, but all enjoy spending time with friends, relaxing, and enjoying an afternoon snack.

Damien Parcello, a sophomore in architecture, is from Jamaica and said that he attends Coffee Hour to see friends and to escape from the pressures of school life.

"All of my friends are here. I come here to meet new people. Just chill, relax, get away from school a bit," said Parcello.

As with most campus organizations, there are always newcomers, those interested in seeing what the group is all about. Simon Siegert from Colombia is a sophomore in architecture. After attending Coffee Hour for the first time, he said that he enjoyed himself and that he plans to attend in the future.

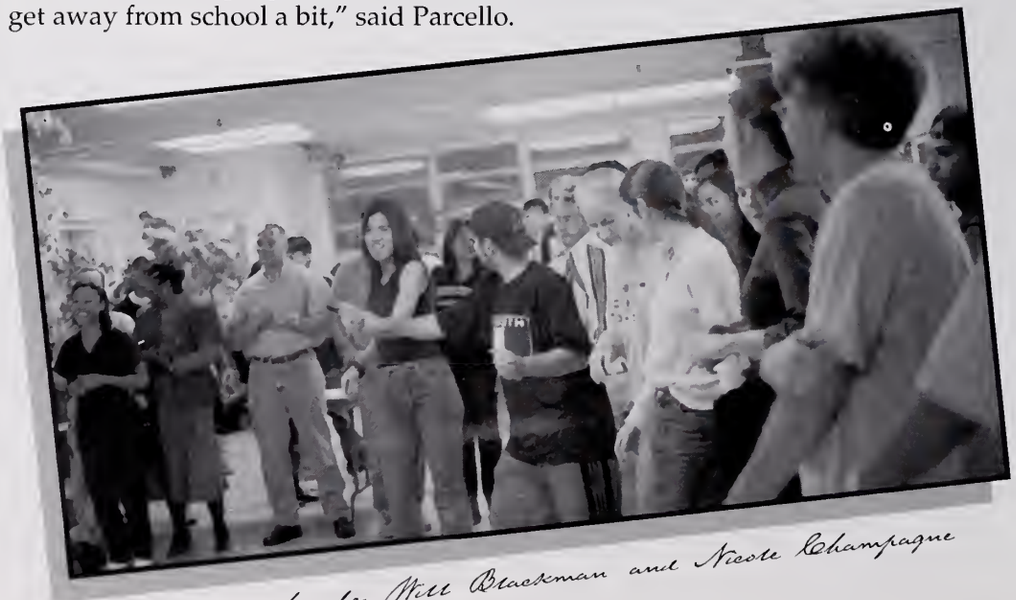

"This is the first time I ever came to Coffee Hour. I don't know why. I guess just to meet new people," said Siegert.

In general, people seem to attend Coffee Hour for the same basic reasons.

"To meet friends and new people," explained Zack Shtieh a senior in industrial technology from Jordan, or, "to relax from the week and play games," said Yeuh-yun (Astra) Lo a sophomore in advertising from Taiwan.

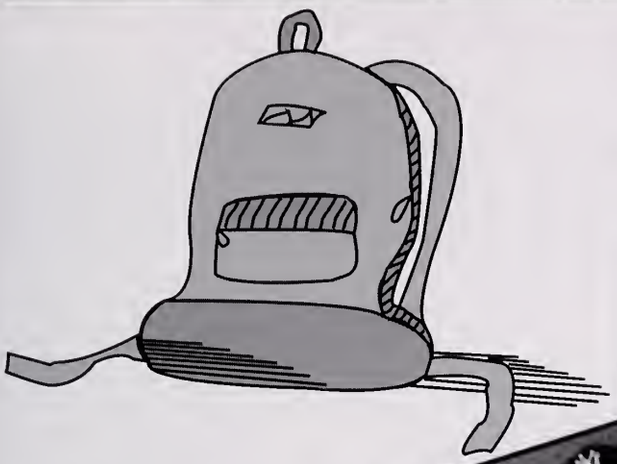

The Office of International Affairs is also in charge of several other programs. The International Friendship program matches international university students with local American families who want to learn about other cultures. The Global Education program sends out letters to Lafayette Parish schools. If a school is interested, university students go to that school and give a presentation on other cultures. Through these programs and others, the Office of International Student Affairs promotes awareness and acceptance of other cultures both at the university and in the surrounding community.

A Time-Honored Program

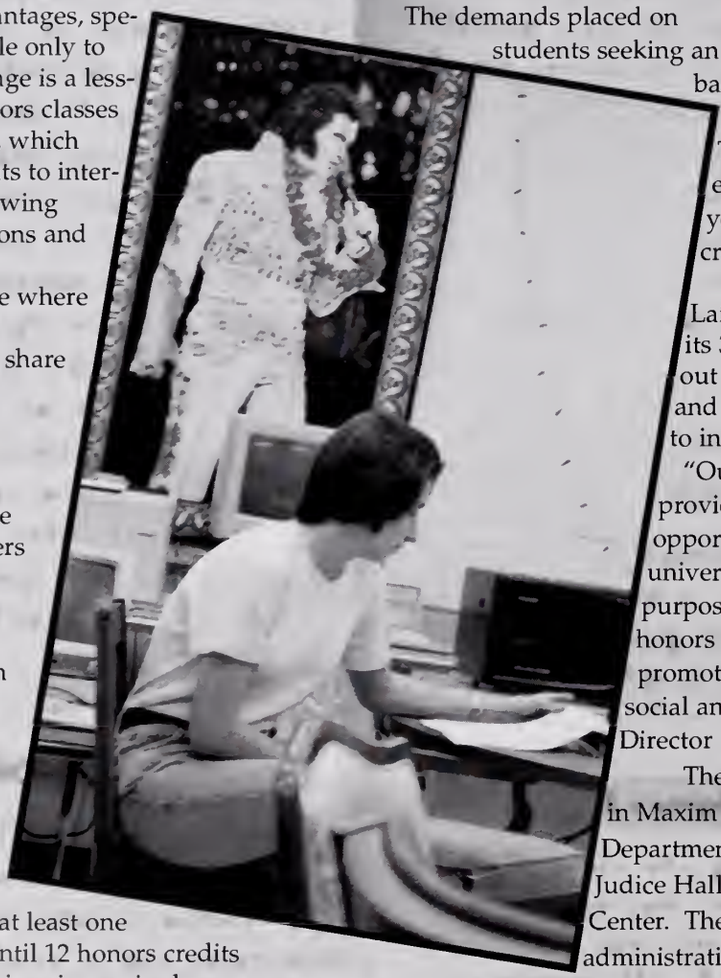

Dr. Pat and honors students discuss ideas and events in the Honors Lounge.

The Honors Program provides serious, ambitious students with a more challenging curriculum and additional intellectual opportunities than classes taken just to fulfill degree requirements.

"The Honors Program thrusts you into a completely different type of learning. You are surrounded by students who are eager to soak up knowledge, and by teachers who let it pour forth," said honors student Marie DesOrmeaux.

In addition to educational advantages, special scholarships are made available only to honors students. Another advantage is a less-structured class setting. Most honors classes are composed of 10 to 20 students, which allows both instructor and students to interact more intimately, as well as allowing more time for discussion of questions and ideas.

"The Honors Program is a place where you're not just a social security number. You're a person who can share thoughts with your peers," said Arpana Bachireddy, honors program participant.

"I enjoy the honors classes more than any others because the teachers are better and there is more student-teacher interaction," said Andre Juneau.

The requirements for admission into the Honors Program for freshman are at least a 26 on the ACT. Once enrolled in the program,students must maintain a minimum cumulative GPA of 3.0 during thier freshman year and a minimum 3.2 GPA every following year. Students must also take at least one honors class each academic year until 12 honors credits have been earned, and honors seminar is required every semester until graduation.

"The purpose of seminar is to build community among honors students and to provide practice in discussion and leadership," said Dr. Rickels.

Students who do not meet the requirements for the Honors Program their freshman year, but have a cumulative GPA of at least a 3.2 may apply for admission and are considered in individual interviews.

An honors baccalaureate degree is an option for honors students. The degree became available in 1979 and 87 students have graduated with the degree. The demands placed on students seeking an honors baccalaureate are higher than those places on regular honors students. They must maintain a 3.5 GPA every semester after their freshman year and earn 21 hours of honors credit.

On Dec. 7, 1999 the UL Lafayette Honors Program celebrated its 30th birthday. The program started out small, with only three professors and 50 students, but has now expanded to include 800 students.

"Our program was established to provide intellectual, cultural and social opportunities for gifted students at the university. We are trying to fulfill this purpose through a number of valued honors courses and programs that promote a sense of community of scholars, social and cultural," said Honors Program Director Pat Rickels.

The program has always been located in Maxim Doucet Hall with the Math Department. Soon it will be relocated to Judice Hall, which will be the official Honors Center. The Honors Center will house classes, administrative offices, meeting rooms as well as a kitchen and computers for students to use.

Showcase of the Arts

For the Centennial Celebration the University of Louisiana at Lafayette held an Academic Showcase for the College of Liberal Arts from Aug. 28 through Sept.26.

"The Academic Showcase makes the college a bit more visible to the general student population and the general public," said Carolyn Dural, assistant dean of Liberal Arts, and one of several organizers of the Academic Showcase for the College of Liberal Arts.

"Also, it allows the college to show the rest of the university the diversity and quality of programs in Liberal Arts," added David Barry, dean of Liberal Arts.

Aug. 30 through Sept. 3 was History Week for the College of Liberal Arts on the fifth floor of H.L. Griffin Hall. Activities for the week included historical exhibits such as Vermillionville, Lafayette Museum and the Academy of Sacred Heart. Films on American and European history were shown, ranging from "Shakespeare in Love" and "Braveheart" to "Thin Red Line" and "Courage Under Fire."

History professors also gave daily lectures. There was special focus on the College of Liberal Arts and UL Lafayette's instrumental role in the self discovery and renewed pride and interest in Acadien culture and music at Festivals Acadiens, Sept.18 and 19.

The Deep South Writers Conference was also part of the showcase. This year's theme for the conference, held Sept.23-26, was "The Local and the Creative Imagination." The conference, which the English department sponsors every year, is a series of workshops and readings for anyone interested in and involved in creative writing. It has both English language and French language writing workshops. According to Barry, the English department brought in some writers from across the country to participate in those workshops.

"It's a very unique opportunity for both, the public and the university community to participate in the creative writing program," said Barry.

In 1921, the creation of the College of Liberal Arts was considered the first step in the reorganization of the academic structure of Southwestern Louisiana Institute (SLI), or what is now UL Lafayette. As the College of Liberal Arts grew, the formation and establishments of other colleges started, such as the College of Agriculture (1938), the College of Engineering (1940), the College of Nursing and Commerce (1952).

Back then, the College of Liberal Arts included the departments of aerospace studies, biology, chemistry, English, foreign languages, history, philosophy, mathematics, microbiology, physics, social studies and speech, along with the schools of arts, architecture and music.

In 1974, the college was divided into the College of Arts, Humanities and Behavioral Sciences and the College of Biological, Mathematical and Physical Sciences.

In 1983, the School of Art and Architecture left the college and 10 years later the School of Music left as well. This placed the College of Arts, Humanities, and Behavior Sciences into the College of Liberal Arts once again.

Now the college has 15 programs, in areas including communications, communicative disorders, criminal justice, history, geography, modern languages, English, philosophy, politicalscience, psychology and anthropolgy.

Showcase of the Sciences

The College of Sciences officially held its Academic Showcase in September of 1999 with a variety of events aimed at the students, alumni, faculty and public.

"To introduce high school students to our programs, to showcase our programs to the public, to honor our donors and to invite our alumni to revisit our campus," were the goals of the showcase explained Wayne Andrepont, assistant dean of the College of Sciences, acting department head of computer science and a professor of math.

The major event for this showcase was a reception for faculty, alumni and donors held in the new A-CIM center. This event was pushed back until the spring semester when the building was completed.

The College of Sciences Showcase, which has been in planning since January, kicked off on Sept. 10 with Health Information Management students hosting a reception for all the hospital employees who aided them in their clinicals.

On Sept. 10, the College of Sciences held a science fair in the USGS National Wetlands Research Center to allow the high school science fair winners from last spring to show their work to the public.

The department of geology held a luncheon at the Petroleum Club recognizing their donors on Sept. 17. The department of chemistry also held a reception on the same day in the Alumni Center for their alumni and donors.

On Sept. 20, the mathematics department hosted a reception at the Alumni Center for the high school and college students who won the department's online math contest. The Alumni were also honored at the reception.

"Those students who were invited to the departmental centennial activities had a chance to meet with alumni and benefactors. This gave them an idea of the relation between the department and the outside world," said Dwynn Lafluer, chairman of the College of Sciences Centennial Committee.

The biology department held its open house on Sept. 24. The open house allowed the public to see demonstrations and to hear guest speaker Meredith Blackwell, the boyd professor from LSU. Her speech was entitled "The Flying Fungi and Other Reminences."

The Center for Advanced Computer Studies, CACS, and the computer department hosted its open house, complete with computer demonstrations and tours of the labs on Nov. 5. A banquet was held after the open house.

In October, the physics department brought in John F. Connolly, a NASA engineer, to talk about NASA's future interplanetary missions. The reception for the physics department was postponed until spring when renovations to the Acadiana Research Lab were completed. The reception was for faculty, staff, alumni, and other invited guests. The department set up a 14-inch refracting telescope at the reception.

The College of the Sciences came into its own in 1974 when it split away from the college of Liberal Arts, which was known as the College of Arts, Humanities and Behavioral Sciences. The College of the Sciences then became the College of Biological, Mathematical and Physical Sciences. The college changed its name to the College of Sciences in the early '90s.

Showcase of the Honors

As UL Lafayette celebrated its centennial, the Honors Program celebrated its 30th anniversary.

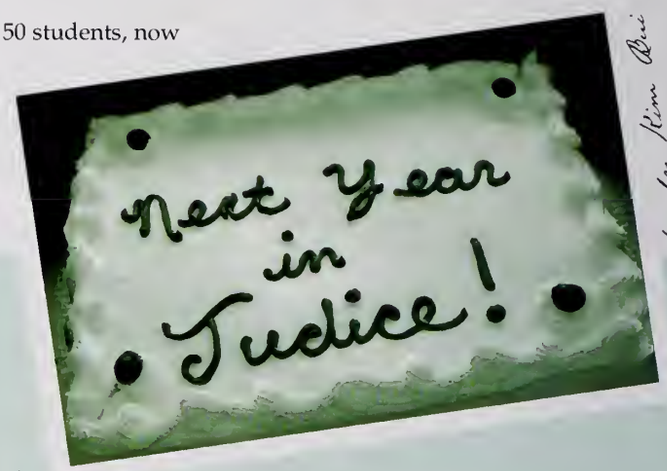

The Honors Program celebrated both events with its Honors Program Centennial Showcase, which took place the entire month of November. The centennial program consisted of four special honors seminars, an honors family picnic and an honors gala.

Patricia Rickels, the head of the Honors Program at UL Lafayette, said the goal of the showcase was, "To share with the world our pride in what we've accomplished and our hopes for an even brighter future."

She said that the goal of the Honors Program itself is, "To provide opportunities for superior students to live up to their intellectual potential and provide cultural and social opportunities for a fully realized experience in their undergraduate years."

The Honors Program, which originally started with 50 students, now has close to 800 students participating.

"It makes me so proud that people I knew as freshmen, not yet dry behind the ears, are now helping another generation of students achieve their full potential," Rickels said about the speakers who participated in the Honors Program while she was in charge. The four centennial seminars were all led by former UL Lafayette Honors graduates.

Photography by Kim Bui

The first seminar's featured speaker was Louis Houston. He earned his Bachelor of Science from UL Lafayette. He went on to earn his Ph.D. from Rice University. He now teaches honors courses at UL Lafayette. The name of his seminar was "Nuclear Physicist by Day, Jazz Musician by Night."

The second seminar was titled "Entomologist, Veterinarian, Public Servant." The guest speaker was Dr. Stuart Gauthier. He earned his Honors Bachelor of Science degree at UL Lafayette. He later earned his D.V.M. from Louisiana State University. He did exactly what Rickels wants for all of her students by he marrying DeAnn Gauthier, a fellow UL Lafayette honors graduate.

"The 1999 Outstanding Young Lawyer of Louisiana" was the title of the third seminar, which was led by attorney Dona Renegar. She is a UL Lafayette Honors Graduate who earned her law degree from Tulane University. Renegar worked for a domestic abuse assistance program before taking a job at a firm in Lafayette. She was voted The Outstanding Young Lawyer in Louisiana by all the other attorneys in the state.

"This is a time when everybody trashes lawyers. Anybody who knows this woman knows that is not universally true," said Rickels.

The speaker of the Grand Centennial Seminar was Ronald J. White. White was the first honors director at UL Lafayette. He obtained his Bachelor of Science degree from UL Lafayette when it was Southwestern Louisiana Institute. He went on to earn his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin. He is now the associate director of the National Space Biomedical Research Institute at Baylor University Medical School in Houston, Texas.

"I'm not thinking that we should measure success in life by how much money you make or how much status you have, but by your personal satisfaction and the amount you can help other people," Rickels said.

On Nov. 3, The Honors Program held an honors gala where several activities occurred. There was a Culture of Man Class Reunion, an Honors Baccalaureate Degree Reunion and a special "Taurus Colloquium" or honors seminar. Rickels also gave her update on honors marriages.

An honors family picnic was held Nov. 26 in a tent near Judice Hall. Judice Hall, the new home of the Honors Program, was dedicated. Everyone at the picnic was photographed in a honors family picture.

The new look for
The University of
Louisiana at Lafayette
sparkles with fervor for the new century ahead.

The Centennial Spectacular took place on Sept. 10. It was part of the three-day extravaganza that kicked off the year-long centennial celebration.

The Spectacular, which was held in the Cajundome, showcased the history of UL Lafayette using video, song, dance and audience interaction. Carol Ross and James Edmunds co-produced the event. Edmunds also wrote and directed The Spectacular.

"We tried to capture the flavor of each era and keep the audience entertained even as we were telling them about the history of the school," explained Ross, who also chaired the Centennial Advisory Committee. "In order to keep the entertainment value high, we wanted to feature the department of performing arts, as well as the cheerleaders, Ragin' Jazz, choir and the marching band."

Before and after the show, "USL 100: A Century of Community," which featured memorabilia from each decade, was on display in the Cajundome lobby. History was a very large part of the Spectacular, but it also greatly depended on student, faculty and community involvement.

The Spectacular began with a procession of honor including elected officials, educational leaders from around the state, special guests, school administrators, alumni, faculty and students. The procession included nearly 1,400 people. President Ray Authement later recognized the family members and descendants of the first five presidents of the university.

The dance department helped interpret the words of Edwin L. Stephens, the first president of the university, with a live-action dance sequence along with a video. The UL Lafayette choir and performing arts departments performed song and dance numbers inspired by the spring musical production "Basically Broadway." The marching band, wind ensemble and percussion ensemble provided music for the event. Kurt Boudreaux, who earned his bachelor's and master's degrees here, also performed music for the event. The cheerleaders and Ragin' Jazz were present as well to spice up the occasion.

Deon Williams, a dancer for the Spectacular said he enjoyed performing but expected a larger crowd.

"I thought that the student involvement was minimal, they should have participated," said Williams. "It appeared as if the students were being apathetic. Only a few clubs marched in the opening."

"I enjoyed learning more about the school's history," admitted Jamie Owens, UL Lafayette student. "I thought participation was pretty good, although a higher percentage of the student body should have been more involved."

"I was very impressed with the production and more impressed with the sense of history it imparted," said David Campo, assistant director of bands. "I can only speak for the part of the production that the school of the arts partook in, and I know that the students and the faculty from the school of the arts were very involved."

The Spectacular officially recognized the name change to the University of Louisiana at Lafayette. UL Lafayette officials said that the university had been trying to change the name for 20 years.

The tickets for admission into the Centennial Spectacular were also unique. These tickets were not mere paper; they were lapel pins. Anyone who wanted to attend the spectacular could purchase these pins for $5. The pins featured the official centennial logo in antique gold over a red lacquer background. It was the signature item for UL Lafayette's year-long celebration.

USL Out With The Old...

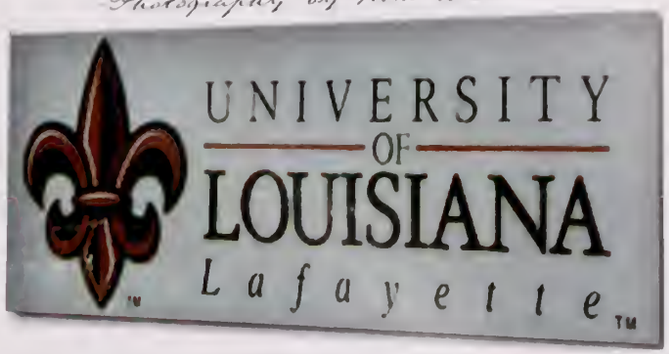

At the Centennial Spectacular on Sept. 10, 1999, the University of Southwestern Louisiana became the University of Louisiana at Lafayette. The new name took 16 years to advocate, although UL Lafayette is the fourth name change for the university. Established in 1900 as the Southwestern Lafayette Industrial Institute, it became Southwestern Lafayette Institute in 1921 when SLI became a four-year college. It was renamed the University of Southwestern Louisiana when it achieved university status in 1960.

The idea for the name change was born about 16 years ago when a group of national consultants were reviewing USL's computer science program. The group commended the program, but said that USL had the wrong address. President Ray Authement realized that if the university and its outstanding programs were to receive national recognition, it would have to omit the regional name.

Photography by Kim Bu

For a short time in 1984, USL became UL Lafayette. During the spring semester, the Board of Supervisors for State Colleges and Universities voted to allow USL to change its name. However, LSU staffers and supporters vehemently opposed the changes and launched an anti-UL campaign. Prominent LSU staff were able to influence the legislature. After a court challenge that did not end until October of 1986, the university was forced to return to the name USL.

One reason that the name has taken so long to become official is because of conditions that accompanied a 1995 bill, which permited universities under the University of Louisiana Board of Supervisors to change their names. The bill required that at least two campuses apply for a name change, that it be approved by the Board of Regents and the Board of Supervisors, and that the change have community, alumni and student support. USL submitted a request for a name change in 1995, expecting Northeastern Louisiana University to do the same. However, NLU alumni and citizens of Monroe opposed the idea, and the process was delayed for both universities until August of 1999. When NLU subitted its request, USL resubmitted its request, and the change became official in September.

IN WITH THE NEW!

An Evening Through Time

It was a pageant of fond memories that honored a tradition that had not been celebrated since 1962 - The Camellia Pageant.

Beginning in 1934, several female students were asked to participate. Maids were chosen and one young woman was crowned queen.

"It was more than just a beauty pageant," Dean Pamela S. Stroup, chairman of the Centennial Traditions Committee, said. "The women who were chosen were not only campus beauties, but leaders and very talented in academics, music, speech or debate. They really were outstanding women."

The Centennial Traditions Committee organized the pageant. Mary Ducharme and Margaret Steen Villemez, first maid in the 1934 Camellia pageant, were the event co-chairs. The theme of the Centennial Camellia Pageant was "Anything Goes!" It was a journey through the music, the past pageants and the other forms of entertainment from 1934 to 1962. The music and performing arts departments provided all of the music and acting for the pageant.

The centennial pageant was much like the past Camellia Pageants because there was a theme and an original script. The one big difference was instead of crowning a new queen, all past queens and first maids were invited back to celebrate this former tradition.

The Centennial Camellia Pageant was accompanied, as in previous years, by the Lafayette Camellia Society's annual flower show, which was held in the Alumni Center. The society presented Ray P. Authement, president of the university, with a new camellia that was created in his honor and was named after him.

Head Coach Jerry Baldwin focused on success.

With a 37-34 victory against Wofford College, the 1999 Ragin Cajuns were able to end the season on a good note. The Cajuns snapped a six game losing streak and avoided tying a dubious UL Lafayette single season record with 10 losses in a season, finishing with a 2-9 record. This game also marked the first ever win in overtime by UL Lafayette after dropping back-to-back decisions in 1997 against North Alabama and UL Monroe.

The team made improvements as the season progressed, even if the record does not show it. Darren Brister, a junior running back was a consistent leader in 1999, leading the Cajuns offensive ground attack with 729 yards on 195 carries and topping all rushers in nine games. During the last game of the season, Brister was able to add a three-yard touchdown run, which was his fourth of the season and second-best on the squad. Brister wasn't the only one helping out on the ground. The 1998 Louisiana Newcomer of the Year, John Benard scampered into the end zone during the Wofford College game, his team-leading seventh touchdown of the season. Benard's 88 rushing yards on 14 carries helped him jump into second on the team with 287 rushing yards on 98 carries this season.

...six the hard way.

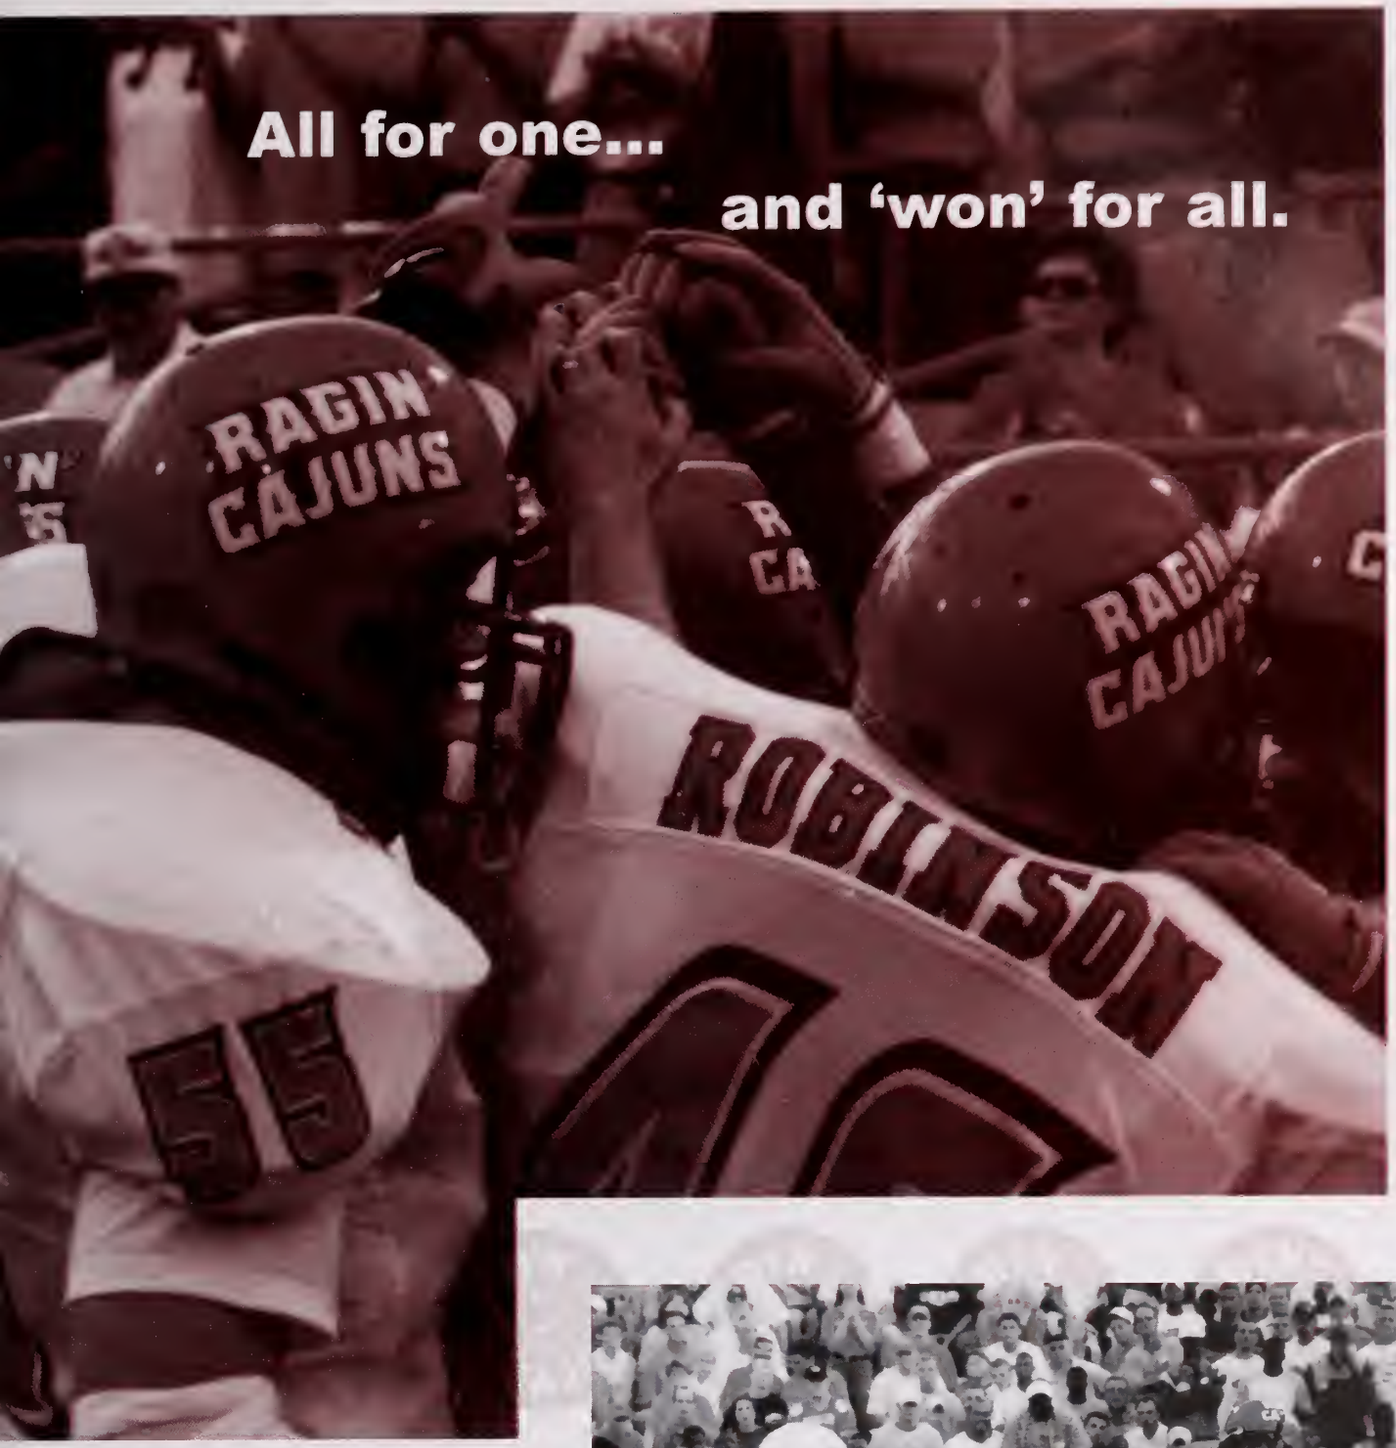

The Cajuns also made improvements in their passing game. Marcus Wilridge set a new career high with seven catches for 131 yards and a 58-yard touchdown in the Cajuns' first win against Middle Tennessee State. As for Desmond Williams, he hauled in a career best eight catches and caught a seven-yard touchdown strike from quarterback Barton Folse, during the last game of the season. This touchdown helped Williams jump past Wilridge into the team lead with three aerial touchdowns.

Most people expected a big change in UL Lafayette football when Coach Baldwin came into play.

"I think he's doing a lot of good things with the team, also he's instilling a lot of values and discipline in the players," said team captain Barton Folse. "Coach Baldwin's philosophy and his way of approaching the team will not only help in football but also in a game of life."

The game against Wofford College marked the end of 16 Cajun seniors on the 1999 team. We say thank you, farewell and good luck to the following seniors: Ronnie Adams, Jason Boyer, Eugen Chambers, Ryan Childers, Patrick Horne, Jeremy Joshua, Timothy Keys, Matt Merry, Ron Payne, Danny Scoot, Chris Shaw, Gerald Stewart, Mark Sylvas, Dwayne Viator and team captains Barton Folse and Charles Woods.

RAGIN' CAJUNS™

CHAMPIONS! No one knows this better than the 1999-2000 Ragin' Cajun men's basketball team.

Whether it was the no look passes from Kenneth Lawrence, the hard-set picks from Brett Smith, the defensive play from Billy Jones or the sideline support from Robert Jupiter, there was no challenge the Cajuns could not handle.

With a 25-6 record this season, the Cajuns advanced to the first round of the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1994.

Throughout the season, the Cajuns have had their share of hardships, from Shae Whiting's mother passing away at the beginning of the season to Robert Jupiter snapping two bones in his left leg in Arkansas, ending his season a month early.

However, this did not stop the Cajuns. In January 2000, the Cajuns tied the school season record with 10 wins in a row. The Cajuns were able to share the Sun Belt Conference Title with South Alabama. This was not enough to satisfy the Cajuns, and they brought home the Sun Belt Tournament Title, which they had not done in six years.

As many of the fans may saw on ESPN on March 6, Lonnie Thomas hit a four-foot jumper with 3.5 seconds remaining to give Louisiana's Ragin' Cajuns a 51-50 victory over South Alabama in the championship game of the TCBY Sun Belt Conference Tournament. This win placed the Cajuns as the No. 13 seed against the fourth-seeded Tennesse in the south regionals of the NCAA Tournament. The Cajuns came out with a tremendous effort and the Volunteers learned quickly that they had their work cut out for them.

The Cajuns practically silenced Tennessee's top players, guard Tony Harris and forward Vincent Yarbrough in the first half and led by as much as 12 points. But, Reggie DeGray and Blane Harmon got into foul trouble early as the referees did not hesitate to blow the whistle against the Cajuns, calling fouls and technical fouls frequently throughout the game.

After taking the lead at half time, the Volunteers were able to bounce back into the game and had a slim lead when the referees made a very questionable call against the Cajuns, securing Tennessee's lead.

On March10, 2000, a banquet was held for the Ragin' Cajuns Men's Basketball Team for fans and players to honor the team. The following honors were awarded:

Academic Achievement Award: Reggie DeGray
Assist Award: Blane Harmon
Defensive Leader Award: Billy Jones
Free Throw Award: Orlando Butler
Most Inspirational Award: Reggie DeGray and Jarret Evans
Most Valueable Player Award: Lonnie Thomas
Mr. Hustle Award: Brett Smith and Shae Whiting
Outstanding Senior Award: Kendall Regis and Derrick Warren

RAGIN' CAJUNS™

The 1999-2000 Lady Cajuns basketball team made a tremendous effort to show people just how well they could play. Going from last season winning only one game, to this season having the record of 12-16 shows they have not given up.

"I am happy with the turnaround this team made from last year," said head coach Gay Nix, whose team won one game in the 1998-99 season. " We have made strides and we have almost everyone coming back next year. We will have a lot of seniors, so I expect us to compete even harder next year."

Having to be the No. 7 seed, the Lady Cajuns played No. 2 seed Western Kentucky in the first round of the Sun Belt Conference Tournament. Considering that UL Lafayette never got within 33 points of WKU at Diddle Arena, many thought it would be a long night for the Cajuns. Yet this only gave the Lady Cajuns more motivation to go out and play basketball the best they could.

"We knew we could compete with them," said Green, who scored a career high of 18 points against the Toppers. This just wasn't enough to allow theLady Cajuns to advance in the second round. "It was just a case of us coming out and playing our game. We juat had too many fouls, and they made their shots."

That is just what WKU did, making 28 of 32 free throws, including 20 of 21 in the second half, thus allowing a 80-70 victory.

After commiting alomost twice as many fouls as the Toppers, the Lady Cajuns stayed close by forcing 18 turnovers and grabbing 14 offensive boards. Also helping the Lady Cajuns in scoring was Kristy King with 11 points and six rebounds and Delesha Qualls tallied 10 points and five boards.

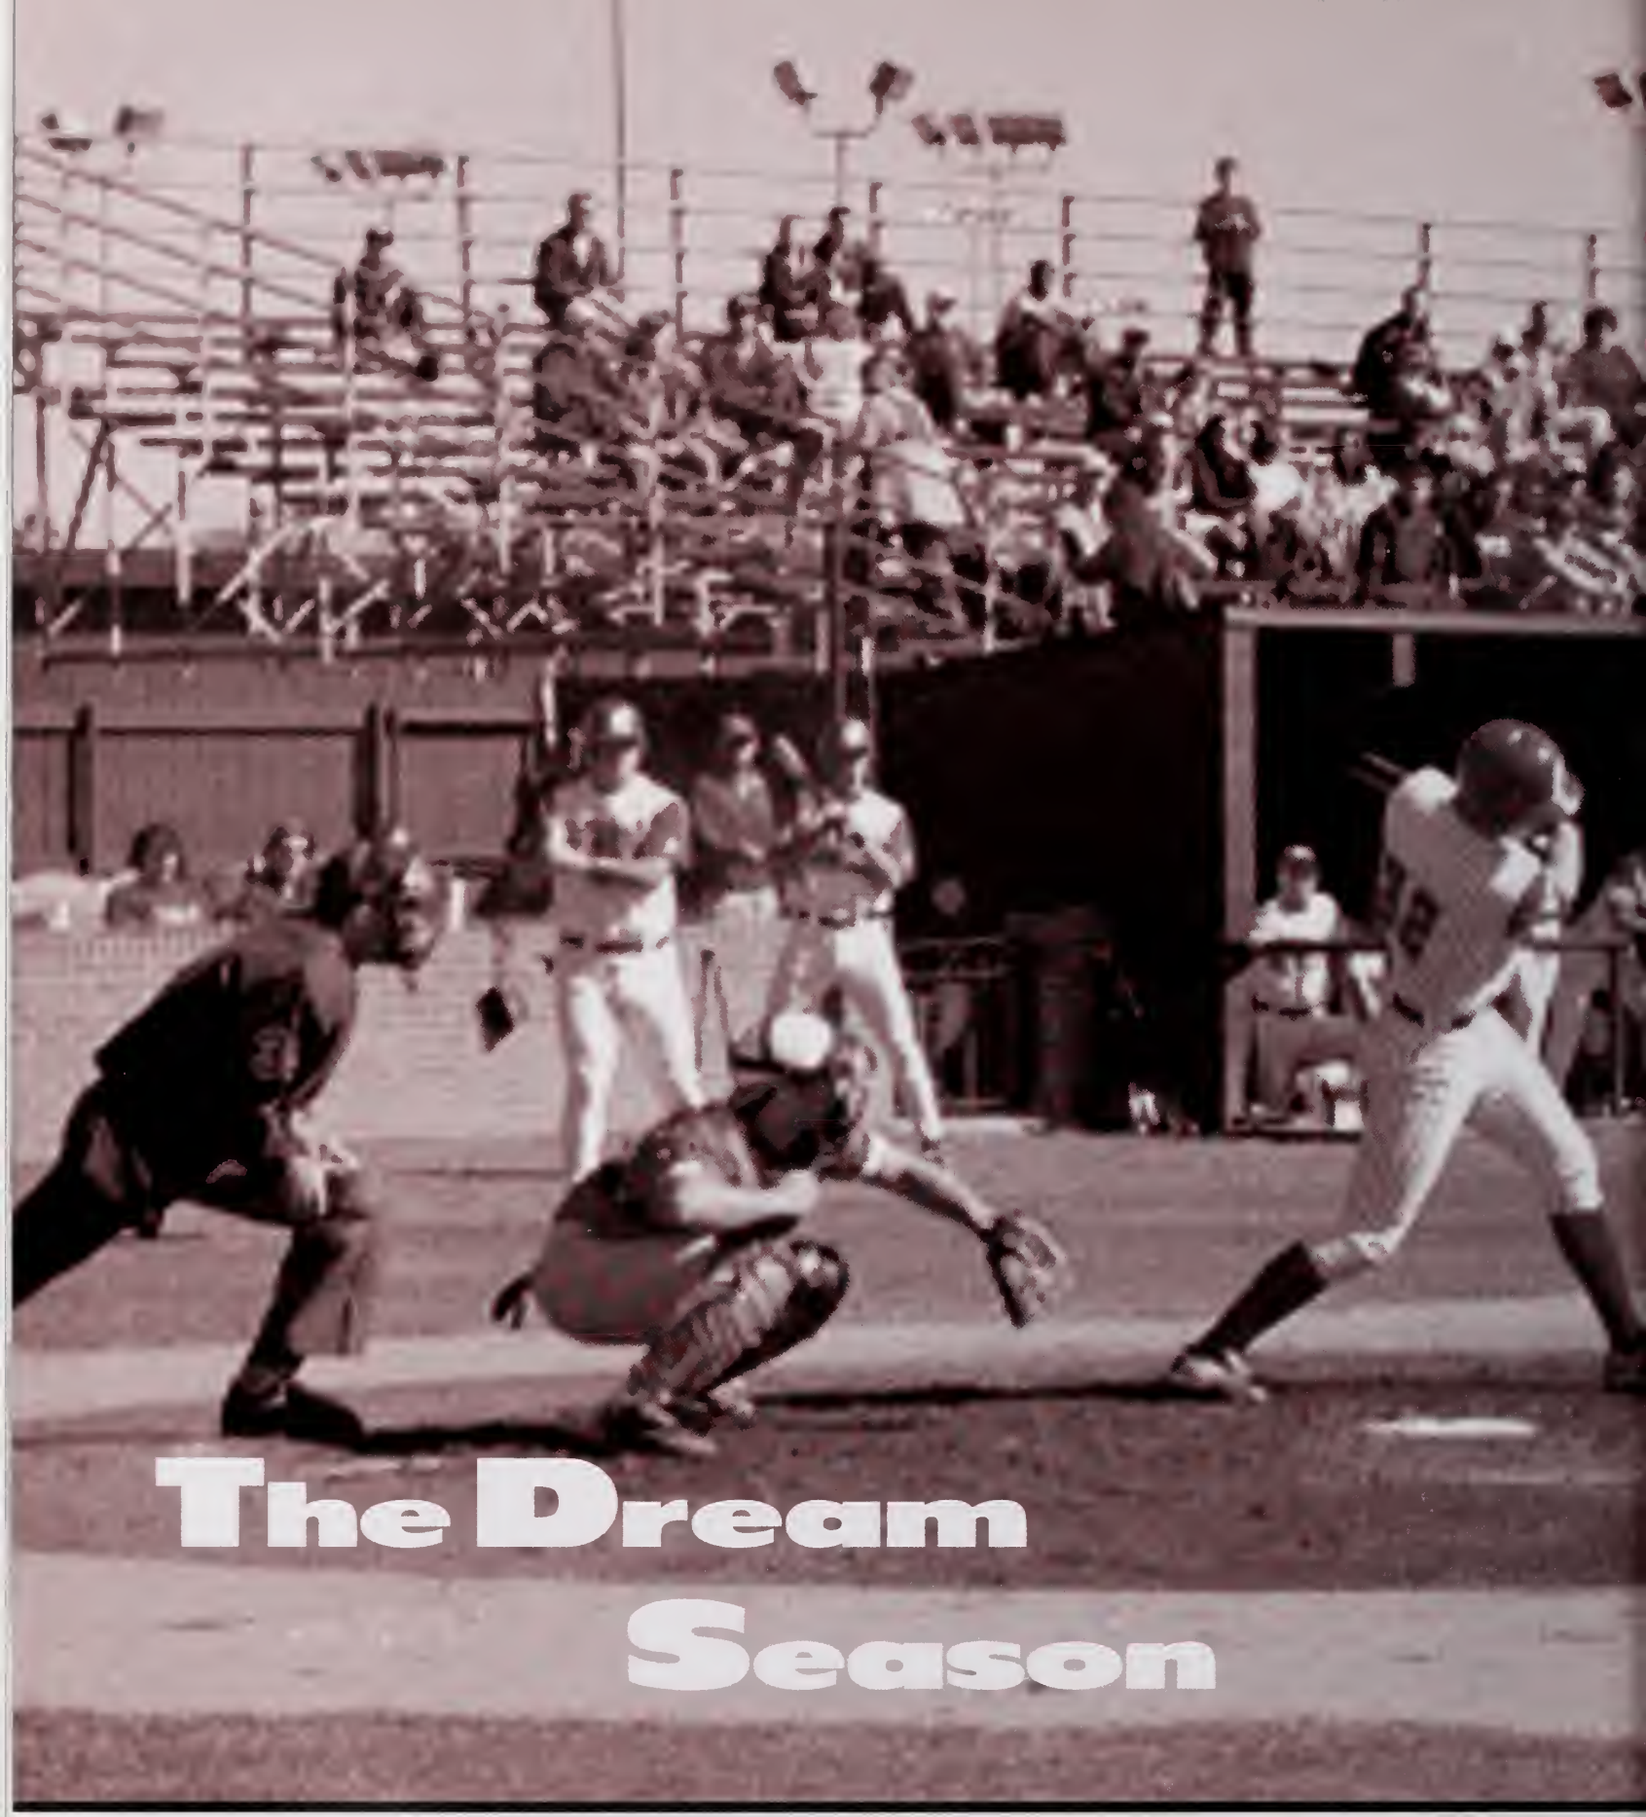

Looking forward to next season, the Lady Cajuns will have three new players and hope to improve there 12-16 record.

The Dream Season

CAJUNS™

The University of Louisiana at Lafayette's baseball team kicked off this season with a new name and their first ever trip to the ultimate goal in collegiate baseball, the NCAA College World Series.

This not only marks the first trip to Omaha for the Cajuns, but it also marks the first time that two South Louisiana schools were represented at the world series with UL Lafayette as the No. 1 seed and Louisiana State as No. 2.

The Cajuns' season brought more success than any other in school history, as the Cajuns raced to as high as fourth in the nation, but by the end of the season fell to as low as 21st in the nation.

The Cajuns had a poor showing at the Sun Belt Conference tournament, which South Alabama won and obtained an automatic berth to an NCAA Regional. Along with the Jaguars, Florida International and New Orleans were two other teams that were able to make appearances in the Regionals, but all were nixed out, leaving the Cajuns as the only team to advance.

The Cajuns would not be denied a Super Regional berth in the year 2000 as they hosted and ran through the tournament undefeated to face South Carolina. This achievement marked the second-straight Super Regional appearance for the Cajuns, as well as being the only two Super Regional appearances in school history.

The Cajuns' second appearance in the Super Regional was a success as they upset the No. 1-ranked Gamecocks by taking two of three games en route to their first ever opportunity for a national championship.

The Cajuns lost the first game of the series 6-3 after junior lefthander Justin Gabriel threw six scoreless innings, but was knocked off the mound by a grand slam and a two-run homer by Gamecock hitters. The Cajuns went on to win the next two games 7-1 and 3-2 under the wings of true freshman Andy Gros and his change up, along with junior righthander, and ace of the staff, Scott Dohmann.

Finally making it to Omaha, the Cajuns proved to be the favorites on and off the field. Facing eigth-seeded, yet top-ranked Stanford, the Cajuns were just barely edged out by the Cardinal, 6-4. The team showed no signs of discouragement as they came back to defeat San Jose State 6-3. The Cajuns managed one of the most thrilling moments in World Series baseball when Steven Feehan had a perfect bunt down the first base line to score the tying run, and Rick Haydel decided to head home after a wild throw by Clemson's pitcher. Haydel slid into home to score the winning run, just barely beating out the throw to home plate. The Cajuns defeated Clemson 5-4 to advance to the final four to face Stanford once again. The Cajuns could not be stopped in the beginning, scoring six quick runs, but Stanford answered the challenge and came back to tie the score and finally win the game 19-9.

The Cajuns may not have brought home the trophy, but they certainly proved that they are a winning organization, and they are tops in the hearts of their fans.

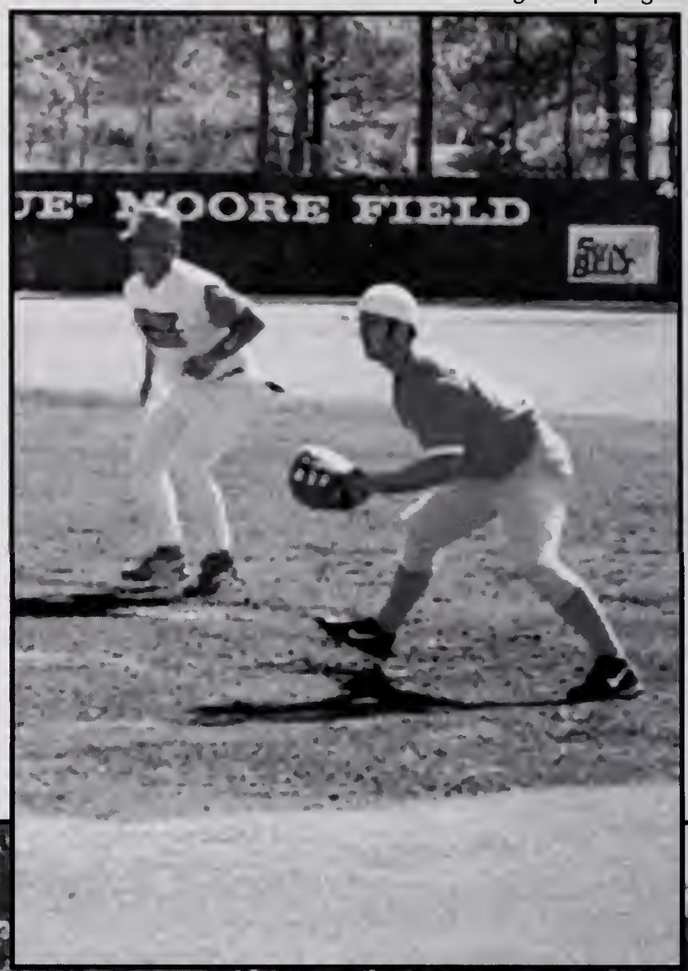

During the season several awards were given to Cajuns players such as Scott Dohmann who earned the title of pitcher of the year for the Sun Belt Conference, Danny Massiatte who was named to the all SBC team and Ryan Gill who was named MVP of the Regional.

The UL Lafayette pom squad made its debut at cheerleading camp this summer. Performing together, the squads placed 2nd in the fight song competition and 3rd in the cheering competition, making camp a great success. The team also received the leadership award. The award is an honor because it is chosen by all camp participants and given to the squad that they believe best demonstrated teamwork and best represented the qualities a cheerleading squad should have.

"I love cheering here because our adviser really cares," said cheeerleader Ann Lambert. "I'm also really glad to have the pom squad because it gets more people involved."

In June, the cheerleaders held a clinic at Bougeois Hall. It was the biggest success ever, with more than 200 people ages 5-18 attending. Of the 200, a few were chosen to cheer with the Ragin'Cajun squads at the last home football game of the season.

Adviser Crystal Greene has been affiliated with cheering here for eight years. She cheered for four, served as coach for two, and has been adviser for two years.

"The things I like most are getting to know each individual and the challenge of bringing all of their personalities together to form one team," said Greene.

The 1999-2000 UL Lafayette cheerleading squad consists of 26 members. The 26 are separated into two squads called co-ed and pom squad.

The requirements to cheer are a 2.0 GPA, full-time student status and a back handspring. Those trying out for the co-ed squad must be able to perform various stunts. Cheerleaders receive a stipend of $200 per semester for their hard work.

The 1999-2000 Ragin' Jazz Dance Squad consists of 13 ladies. The squad performs at football games, basketball games, pep rallies and at events throughout the community.

This year the squad attended the Universal Dance Association College Dance Camp at Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos, Texas. The ladies excelled at camp and received a superior trophy, an overall award for superior performance during the week's evaluations. The squad also competed in the Home Routine category, where they placed fourth against top squads from across the country, including last year's national first-place team. The Ragin' Jazz also received the Leadership Award, which is the most prestigious award at camp. It is awarded by all of the camp participants for the squad that they most admire and that exemplifies the aspects of a quality dance team.

Throughout the year, the dancers have kept busy with performances, practices and fundraisers. They host an annual summer dance clinic for children between the ages of 6 and 18. They also co-host an annual po-boy sale with the cheerleaders.

The squad practices two or three days a week, with performances occurring on different occasions. The dancers helped celebrate the centennial with a special performance at the Centennial Spectacular in September. Although they balance a busy schedule with practices, performances, work, school and extracurricular activities, the ladies still manage to keep up their grades. The squad's overall GPA is a 3.8.

Louisiana's Ragin' Cajun golf team came out swinging this season. Improving as the season progressed, the team finished 10th at its first tournament in the fall, the Nebraska Fairway Club Invitational in Lincoln, Neb. The team had an impressive showing at the SM Stonebridge Big "E" Invitational, earning a fifth place finish. The Cajuns had their best finish of the fall at the Missouri Bluffs Intercollegiate Tournament. The team finished in second place with three over par, and Richard Ainley had the best score on the team, tying for a second place finish at five under par.

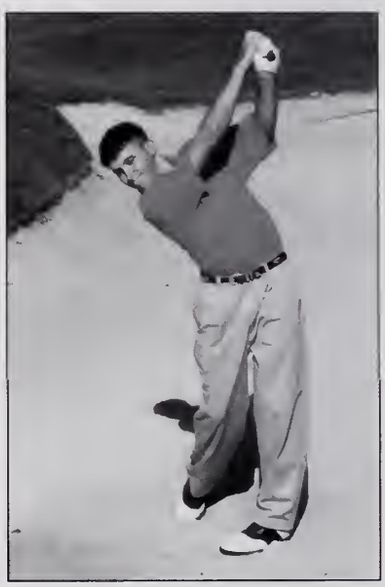

The Cajuns continued their competitive play in the spring. At the Louisiana Classics competition here in Lafayette, the team finished in sixth place, led by Ainley's individual sixth place performance. On April 4, Ainley once again led the Cajuns to an impressive finish, personally finishing in first place at four under par while the team earned a fifth place finish at the Arkansas State Intercollegiate Tournament. The Bentwater Country Club in Montgomery, Texas proved to be a friendly course for the Cajuns, as they grabbed a third place finish in the Bearkat Classic, led by Orn Hjartarson's seventh place finish at two under par.

The Cajuns finished as the runners up in the Sun Belt Conference Tournament, being topped only by conference champions Arkansas-Little Rock. Finishing in the top 20 were Richard Ainley, first place at nine under par, Burke Spensky, tied for 12th place at seven over par, and Chris Chesson, 16th at eight over par.

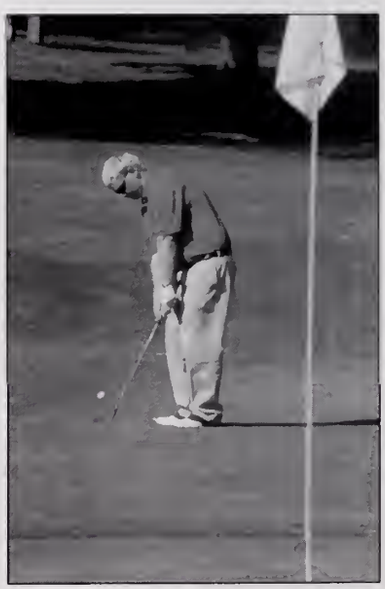

Their stellar performance at the conference tournament earned the Cajuns an invite to the NCAA Regional in Victoria, Texas. This was the first time since 1993 that the Cajuns made it that far. Unfortunately, their season ended here, as the Cajuns finished the final round at eight over par, placing them 21st out of 27 teams.

One individual was also recognized for his performance this season. Richard Ainley was named to the first team All Louisiana. He lead the Cajuns with a 73.05 scoring average and finished 11 rounds subpar out of 12 tournaments.

As the newest club sport on campus, many people do not know about the Ragin' Cajun inline hockey team.

"Our biggest misconception was that this was an ice hockey team to begin with," stated third year team member and President Nick Istre. The team remains one of UL Lafayette's best kept secrets, having earned a respectable reputation among their opponents, despite their lack of fans.

This team did not do as well as they had done their first two years of exsistence, according to Istre. The team fell just short of making the playoffs. He said the loss of several key players hurt the team this year, but they are working hard to improve for next season. This team is unlike others on campus in that they coach themselves, and some team members did not even play hockey until college.

Even though they are not an ice hockey team, they are striving to become part of the Ice Hockey League next season along with Tulane and LSU.

"The biggest thing we want to do is to improve as team and that's going to be a goal from year to year," said Istre.

Well sports fans, many of you may not know about this team, but the soccer team has been a winning tradition here at UL Lafayette for 13 years.

"As of this season, the UL soccer team has done well and has proved it by making it to the national tournament," said head coach David Chaney. In the past, Ragin' Cajun soccer had made it as far as the regional game, but had failed to win a championship trophy.

They ranked fourth in a region that consists of Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Oklahoma. The UL Lafayette soccer club consisted of 20 members that dedicate their spare time to practice and represent this university throughout the season.

The team looked to team captains Jeff Carrier and Paul Guerrero for leaderhip. "Jeff and Paul are the two more dedicated players," stated assistant coach Mike Piasecki. "They are not much of vocal leaders, but they set good examples, and we can always depend on them to get the job done."

Like in all sports, injuries can be a major problem.The team had its share of injuries this season, especially at the midfielder position. Midfielder Walter Aguilar tore a lateral ligament and midfielder Stuart LeBlanc suffered a torn hamstring.

"These injuries have slowed the process down for the team, but they will adjust," stated Piasecki.

As the soccer team ended their season with six wins, one loss and two ties, UL Lafayette will have to look forward to next year's season. Competing in the national tournament was just the beginning for this young team, maybe next year will be a state title.

The program hopes to expand and add a women's team in the next few years, as well as raising the team's status from a club sport to a college league sport.

Lady Cajun softball fans are spoiled. How else could a season that produced 45 wins against only 15 losses, the inaugural Sun Belt Conference Championship for softball, two All-Americans and a post-season birth in an NCAA regional be considered by some a disappointment?

In its 20 years of existence under legendary head coach Yvette Girouard, the University of Louisiana at Lafayette has enjoyed an unprecedented amount of success. So much success in fact, that many Lady Cajun fans have such high expectations as to believe that anything less than an appearance in the College World Series is a failure and, while the team fell a few games short of that goal, anyone associated with the squad knows the team's accomplishments should not be overlooked.

Wins have become a staple of every Lady Cajun season, and the 2000 season was no different as the Lady Cajuns overcame key early season injuries to post yet another solid year.

As usual, the Lady Cajuns were ranked among the nation's elite programs for the entire season and finished play ranked No. 17.

Despite an extremely difficult schedule, which pitted UL Lafayette against some of the top teams in the country, the Lady Cajuns still managed 45 victories and won several impressive tournaments, including the 14th Louisiana Classics and the Janette Spell Memorial, both held at Lady Cajun Park.

Several Lady Cajuns were also given prestigious individual awards.

Senior Tiffany Clark became only the second Lady Cajun to be selected as an All-American three times in her career. Joining Clark as an All-American was junior first baseman Jana Mower who was selected for the first time.

Clark, who finished her career at UL Lafayette as the school's all-time leader in hits, doubles, RBI's, total bases and walks, was also named the SBC player of the year.

Senior pitcher Kim Dunlap was named SBC pitcher of the year and was joined by Clark, Mower, senior Michele Bailon and Alana Addison on the All SBC Team.

Even Girouard, who has won virtually every award given, garnered a new trophy to add to her collection, as she was selected SBC Coach of theYear.

After winning the first ever SBC Tournament in impressive fashion, it appeared the Lady Cajuns were poised to make a deep run in their NCAA regional, but an opening- round loss to Hofstra backed the team into a corner and left them clawing for their lives.

In typical Lady Cajun fashion, however, UL Lafayette refused to die and defeated heated in-state rival LSU to keep the season alive. The next game against Oregon proved to be the end of the road for the Lady Cajuns and their four seniors Bailon, Clark, Michelle Hummel and Megan Fields.

The Lady Cajuns lost 4-3 to the Ducks despite a valiant effort in which they fought to the bitter end and showed the true heart of the Lady Cajun softball program.

The Ragin Cajun water ski team made a run for the national championship in Sacramento, Calif. during the weekend of Oct. 14-16. In hopes of gaining a national title, they fell one place short.

"With competitions being tough at nationals, UL received the runner-up position in the national title chase," said Coach Theodore Edwards. This year UL Monroe was able to keep the Cajuns away from the title and hold on to it themselves.

"To win the national title everyone must ski up to their potential, and when that did not happen in the slalom event, it caused us to wind up in the runner-up position," said Edwards.

Team members were judged on height, distance and formation during their jumps. Six team members were awarded positions on the All American Team, and Scott Smith was also awarded the honor of team captain of the All American Team for his outstanding performances. His teamates included:

(1) Sylia Stantidi, All American Team - trick skiing, slalom and over all
(2) Maria Louisa (LuLu) Botero, All American Team - jump and over all
(3) Lindsey Trapp, All American Team - jump event
(4) Simone Seigert, All American Team - trick event
(5) Guillaume Paré, All American Team - overall

Now as the competitive season comes to an end, the team looks forward to preparing for the next season and bringing a national title to Lafayette.

With new defensive and offensive strategies set by the new head coach Chris Campbell, along with the talented and unified players, the Lady Cajuns ended this season in sixth place in the Sun Belt Conference with a record of 15-18.

This season was a learning experience for the team. They learned to deal with and ovecome unexpected situations, as well as resolving the personality poblems that plagued the team last year.

"(Last year) there were conflicts with personalities and the team was broken up into clicks where certain people hung with certain people," said Katrina Vanoudheusden.

This season was diferent and the team presented a strong, unified front.

"This season was an evolution of trying to figure out what talents individuals had and trying to find ways to put them into good defensive and offensive plays," stated Campbell.

This season, the UL Lafayette volleyball team learned exactly what they were capable of. The Lady Cajuns played extremely well and were pleased with their outcome. Dealing with such dilemmas as getting used to the ways and teachings of their new coach, losing influential player Lisa Bordes and personal injuries taught them to be patient on the court. They also grew closer as a team which helped them to play better and depend on each other more.

"We got stronger by our problems," replied Janaina Gomes, right outside hitter. The rest of the team agreed with Gomes.

"From the beginning to the end ...We played a lot better. It was more of a family," said Perez.

Starting off with a bang, the volleyball team won its first match, beating Lamar with a score of 3-0. Defeating their first opponent was a hard task, but they pulled it off.

This year's season had its ups and downs. Beating the University of New Orleans 3-0 at home was a big win for the Lady Cajuns. Their first game of the conference tournament was also an exciting one. They defeated Denver by the score of 3-1. Next they challenged Arkansas, losing 3-0, and that loss ended their participation in the tounament and the season.

The season ended with the Ragin' Cajuns reaching their goal of finishing fourth in the Sun Belt Conference Tournament.

The exciting meets of track and field began on Jan. 15, 2000, with the start of the indoor season.

At the LSU Purple Tiger Meet, the Cajuns earned 5 top-3 finishes. Kyries Hebert was the men's lone first place finisher with a jump of 23-2 1/4 in the long jump. Ben Fisher claimed a second place finish in the 800-meter dash, and Derrick James finished third in the hurdles. Also finishing third was Desmond Lafleur in the 400. Orlando Frederick also had a successful outing, earning fourth place in the triple jump and fifth in the long jump. Dodi Oubre led the Cajun women, grabbing first place in the 5000 and teammate Nedra Green was right behind her in third place.

The women also had a strong showing at the Houston Invitational. Natalie Richardson claimed second in the high jump and Temeka Kenebrew had a busy weekend, finishing third in the shot put and second in the weight throw.

Against tough competition, the Cajuns fared well at the LSU Invitational. The Cajuns had two first place finishers, Patrick Horne in the 400 and James in the 60-meter hurdles. Hebert did the team proud with his third place finish in the long jump, and the men's 4x400 relay came in fourth. Oubre had another successful performance, placing second in the 5000.

At the Jeff Davis Invitational, the men placed eighth out of 14 teams and the women nineth out of 18. Mike Devries and Luke Harrington both earned third-place finishes in the shot put and pole vault, respectively. Kenebrew earned her fourth straight finish in the top five with her second place showing in the shot put. Oubre was also another bright spot for the Cajuns, earning third place in the 1600.

At the LSU Twilight meet, Frederick grabbed first place in the triple jump and teammate Harrington was right behind him in third place. James cruised past most of his competitors to claim second place in the 60-meter hurdles. On the women's side, Kenebrew and Oubre continued to lead the team. Kenebrew set the school's weight throw record with a toss of 50-8.25, and Oubre finished third in the 300m run.

The indoor season ended with the Sun Belt Tournament. The men finished second behind Arkansas State and the women ended their season in seventh place. Highlights for the men included Fisher's first place finish in the 800m, James' first place in the 55m hurdles and the 4x400 relay team's (Fisher, Kevin Charles, Derrick Roderigue and Lafluer) first place performance. Devries was also crucial to the Cajuns' success, finishing second in the shot put and third in the weight throw. Frederick continued his dominance of the triple jump, finishing second and Green also earned a second place finish, hers in the 44-meter run.

The Cajuns began their outdoor season this spring at the Lamar Invitational. They owned the men's 100-meter hurdles, with Kevin Charles, Greg Stewart and Ben Rogers claiming first, second and third places, respectively. The Cajuns also dominated the javelin, with Ron Payne finishing second and Rogers finishing third. Devries also earned second place in the shot put and the 4x400 relay team claimed third place. The best performances for the women came from Tonika Balka, third in the long jump, and Susan Breecheen, third in the discus.

At the LSU Alumni Gold Relays, Charles led the men with his second-place showing in the 110-meter hurdles, and Danielle Frank led the women with her fourth-place finish in the javelin.

The Cajuns had their strongest showing at the Northwestern State Invitational. Jeanne Menard had two career bests, a time of 19:27.78 in the 5000 meters, and 14:55.32 in the 1500 meters (fifth place). Oubre finished fourth in the 1500 meters, and Cajuns Carlotta Caffery and Frank grabbed second and third places in the javelin. Richard Hoyt earned a second place finish in the pole vault with his career best 14-6, and no one could beat the Cajuns in the high jump. Ketric Patton finished first and Terrell Lagarde was right behind him in second.

The season ended with the Sun Belt Conference Tournament. Patton ended the season on a high note, finishing second in the high jump. The biggest winner for the Cajuns however, was Harrington, who claimed the decathlon title. He entered the second day of competition 164 points behind first place, but came back to win by almost 200 points. Harrington did this by finishing third in hurdles, first in discus and 1500, and second in pole vault and javelin.

The Cajuns are hoping to continue their success next season.

The Ragin' Cajuns began the season with two strong wins over in-state opponents New Orleans and Louisiana-Monroe. Over the next three weeks, the team faced stiff competition, picking up five of their seven season losses, all of which were against teams ranked in the top 40.

However, the Cajuns turned things around. After falling to Alabama-Birmingham on March 16, the Cajuns regrouped and were unstoppable, winning their next eight straight matches. The winning continued for exactly one month, until the Cajuns dropped a hard fought, closely contested match against South Alabama in the Sun Belt Conference Tournament Finals.

Earning a bid to an NCAA regional, the Cajuns traveled to College Station, Texas to face Tulane, a team the Cajuns know all too well. After losing to Tulane 4-3 in last year's regional, the Cajuns were ready for revenge, overpowering the Green Wave 4-3. Next, they faced the No. 1-seeded Aggies, who ended the Cajun's season, beating them 4-0. The Cajuns finished the season at 15-7.

The team made a strong showing at the H.E.B. Team Championships in Corpus Christi, Texas in March. After an upset win over 25th-ranked Boise State, the Cajuns rolled past nationally ranked Oklahoma and Washington, and their only loss came against No. 15 Texas Christian University. The Cajuns finished in third place.

The team also fared well at the Blue Gray National Tennis Classic in Montgomery, Ala. After dropping a close match to Alabama-Birmingham, the Cajuns rebounded with strong wins over William and Mary and Virginia.

The success of the Ragin' Cajuns did not go unnoticed this season. Finishing as the runner-up at the Sun Belt Conference Tournament, several team members earned individual awards. Junior Eduardo Gordilho and freshman Jakub Ilowski were named to the All Conference Team in singles, while Gordilho and senior Michal Jordan earned all conference recognition for their doubles play. The Cajuns also made an impact nationally. They started the season ranked 36 in the ITA rankings and continued to climb steadily, where they peaked at No. 22 in mid-March before ending the season ranked 28th. The only Cajun to earn a national singles ranking was Gordilho. He maintained a top-20 ranking all season, which earned him All-American honors. Gordilho, two-time Sun Belt Conference Player of the Week, also earned Louisiana Player of the Year, while Ilowski was recognized as Louisiana Freshman of the Year, and junior Bruno Puzzi also earned a spot on the second All-Louisiana Team, and coach Brett Schwartz was named Louisiana Coach of the Year.

The Ragin' Cajun women's tennis team got off to a rocky start, but was able to pull it all together in the end.

The team started the season shutting out Texas-Pan American, 9-0, but that was its only win in February. However, the Cajuns continued to improve and headed in to the Sun Belt Conference Tournament with a record of 7-10. Seeded seventh, The Cajuns were able to rebound from a first round loss to Florida International and top Denver 5-4. Then, amidst a lot of arguing and complaining, the Cajuns upset Arkansas-Little Rock to finish in fifth place for the second year in a row.

The Cajuns looked to senior Maribeth Rivera for leadership and guidance, while freshman Arina Uratani led the Cajuns on the courts in the No. 1 position. Finishing with the most wins on the team and a record of 12-8, Uratani was honored with a spot on the All-Louisiana second team. Sophomore Amanda Cowieson played well and was virtually unstoppable towards the end of the season, winning four of her last five and earning the highest winning percentage on the team at .611.

In doubles, the duo of Uratani and Irena Novotna claimed the best average at .800, while the tandem of Cowieson and Rivera won the most matches, finishing at 10-5.

With six players returning next season, the team looks forward to doing even better in the future.

agin' Cajun athletics not only has talented players in the game, but also has dedicated supporters on the sidelines. The athletic program experienced two losses recently, one a record-breaking player, the other a hard-working staff member. Basketball standout Kim Perrot and equipment manager William "Blackjack" Landry will be remebered not only for the wonderful jobs they did, but also for being the magnificent people that they were.

After being diagnosed with cancer in Febuary of 1999, Perrot passed away in August 1999 at the age of 32. With the courage and support from her family and friends, Perrot was able to use her gifts to the fullest.

Even though Perrot had to sit out the third season of the WNBA, she still helped in supporting her team members. She also found the time to make motivational speeches at local high schools, allowing students to know what her life was like and encouraging everyone to fulfill their dreams.

After many years of playing basketball, Perrot still remains UL Lafayette's leader in career points (2157), assists (654) and steals (421). Perrot attempted more shots than anyone in UL Lafayette history (2003) and made 828 of them. Not only did Perrot shot the ball well, she was also able to get a few rebounds (553).

After college Perrot continued to play basketball for another six years for professional teams in Sweden, Germany, Israel, France, and then she returned to the United States in 1997 to try out for the Comets. As a 5'4" wild point guard, head coach Van Chancellor overlooked Perrot for his franchise. With support from two fans writing Chancellor a letter, he realized that Perrot could help the team out in many ways. Without a doubt, Perrot was an emotional leader for the Houston Comets.

With only three seasons so far, the Houston Comets have claimed every championship ring. During the last game against the New York Liberty, Cynthia Cooper, Perrot's friend, had to bring the team together to win the championship for Perrot. Once again with the victory over the liberty, 59-47, the Comets were able to fulfill a promise to Perrot. Perrot might not have been there personally, but she was there spiritually.

During the celebration friends, family, and fans began to yell, "Number 3 for number 10!" Referring to this win as the third title for Kim Perrot.

Many people will remember Perrot more as a hero more than anything else. Made of a courage so strong, she will remain a wonderful memory to everyone, especially to all athletes.

Also leaving us with wonderful memories was Blackjack Landry. He was a man who touched many lives and dedicated much of his time to Ragin' Cajun athletics while working as an equipment manager from 1963 to 1998.

Blackjack will always be remembered not only for the work he did, but also for his giving spirit. Those who knew him could always count on him.

"It showed at his funeral," said Lenny Williams, equipment supervisor. "I remember we had a packed house."

Many people would even say that Blackjack was the heart and soul of UL Lafayette athletics. He was always the first one to work and the last one to leave, helping out with both men's and women's sports.

"I worked with BJ for 18 years. We learned a lot from each other, and he was my best friend," said Williams.

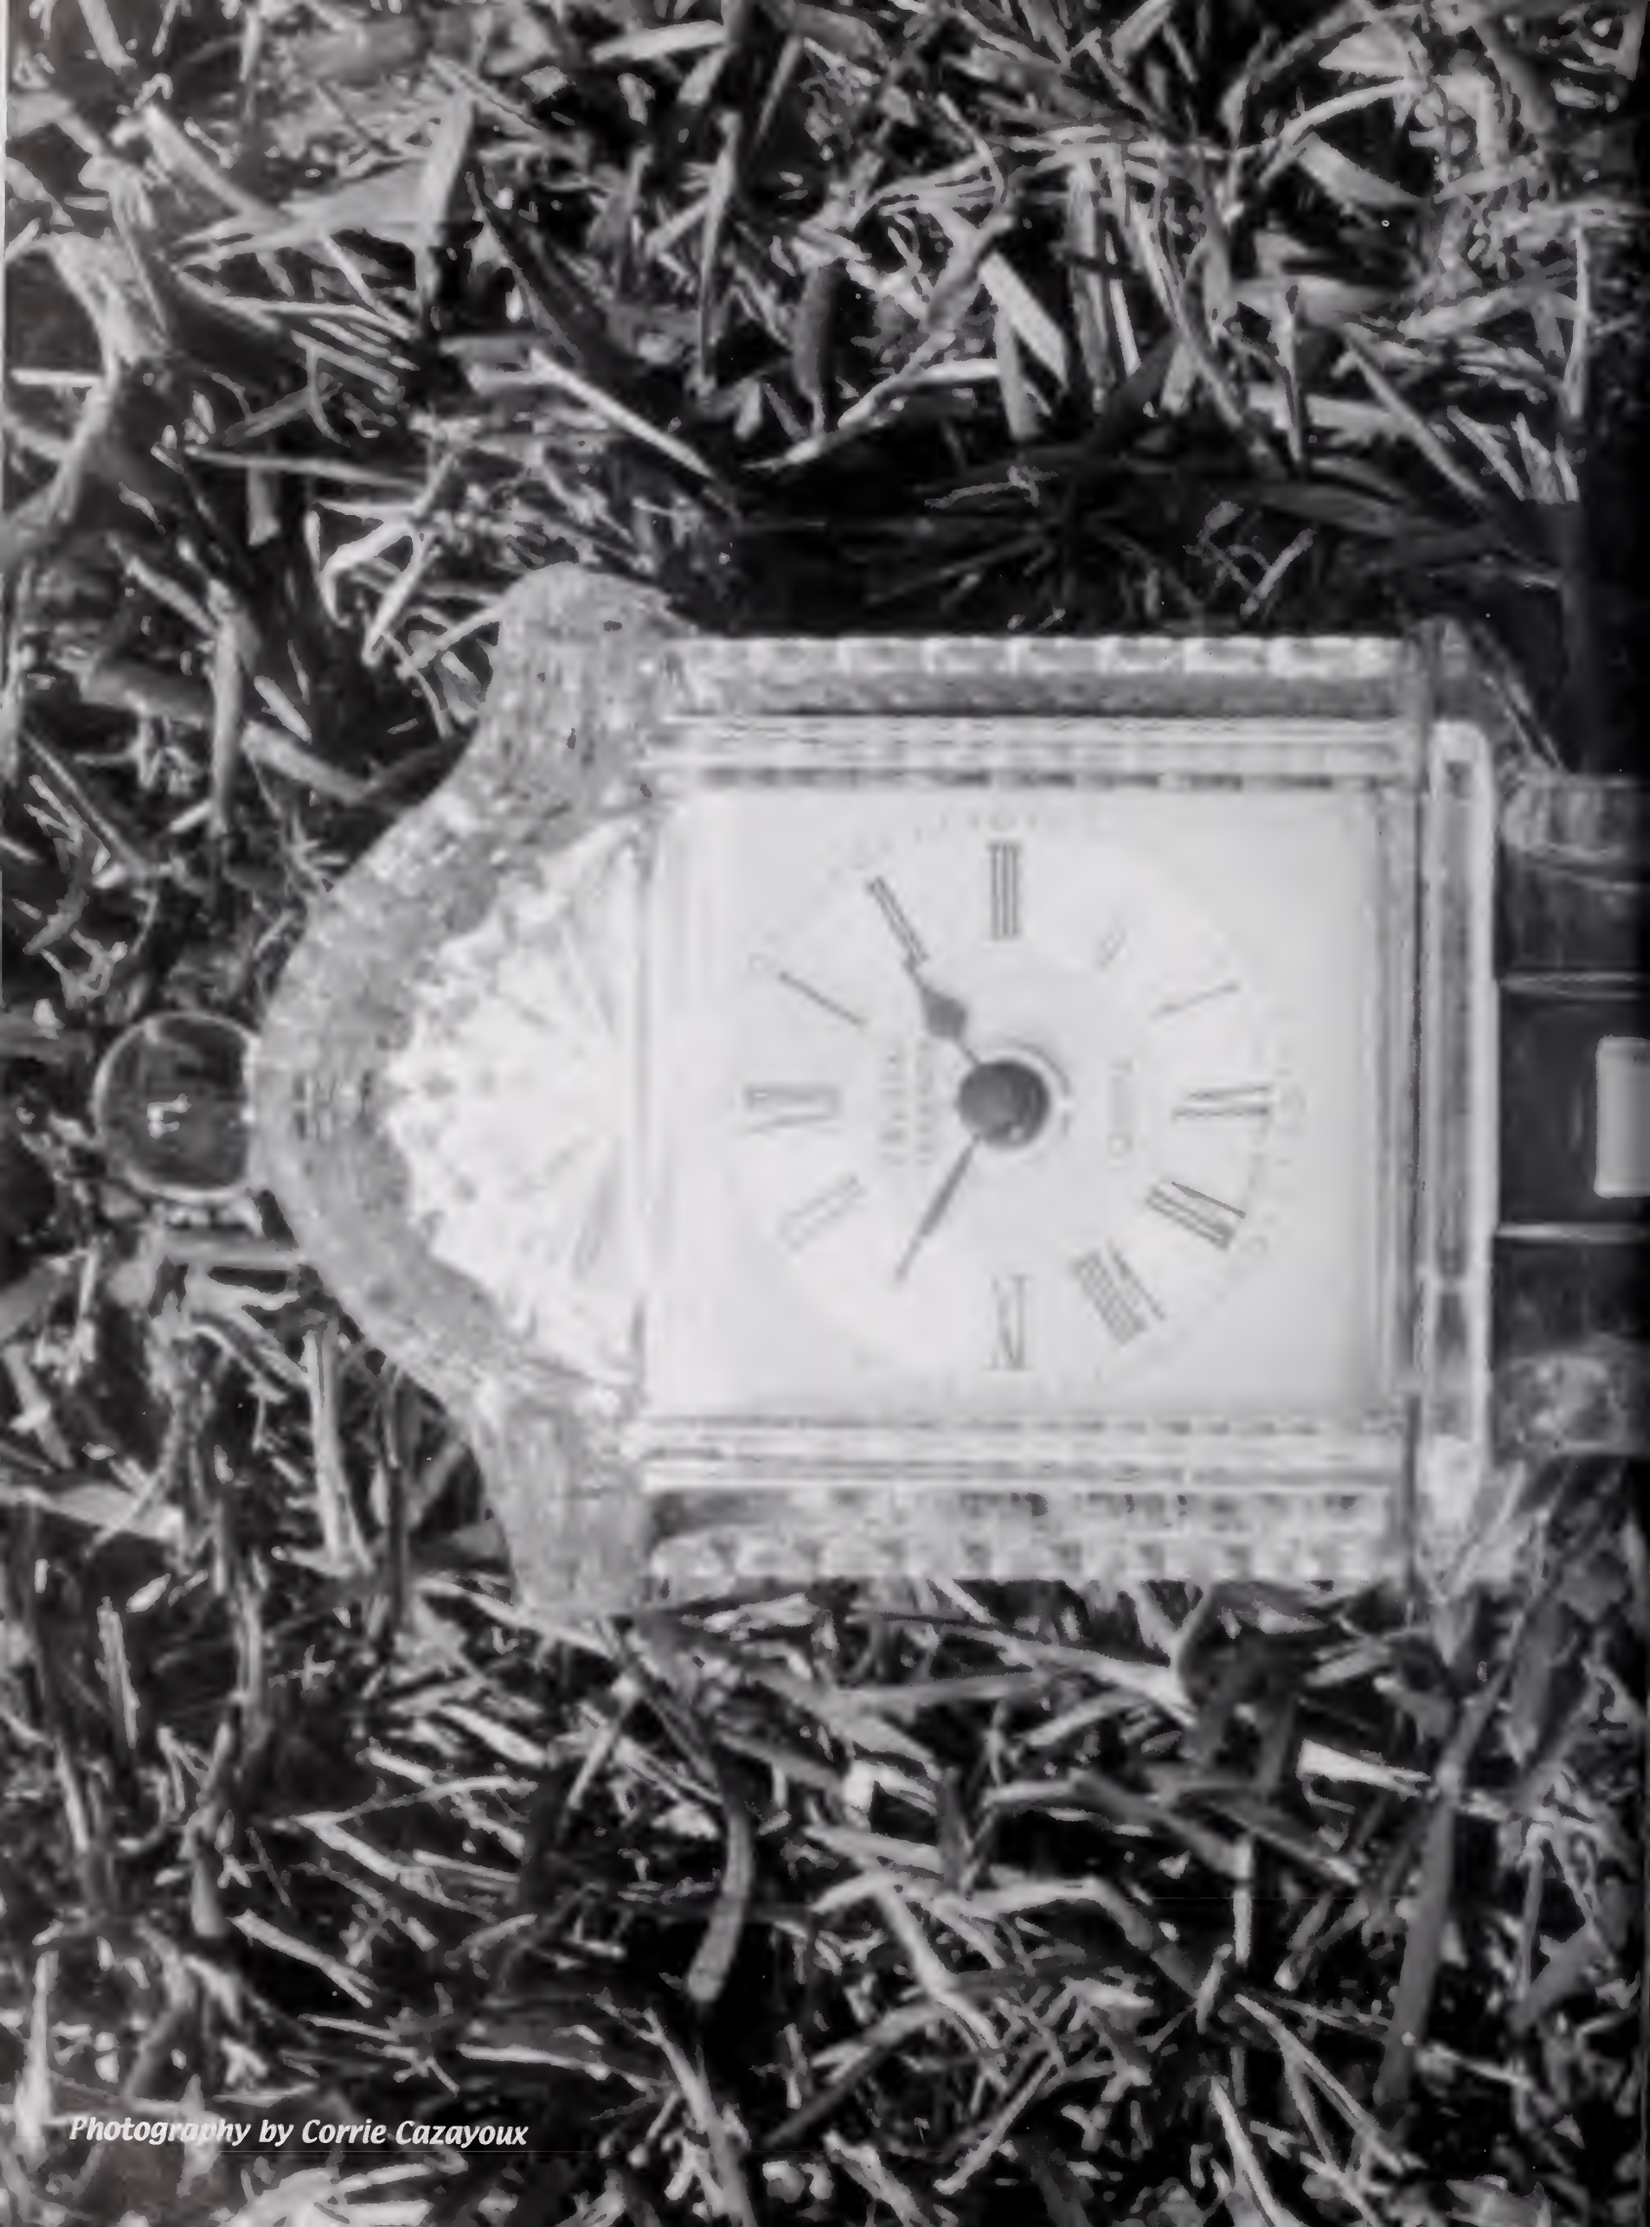

Assisstant Athletic Director John Porche echoed Williams' sentiments.

"A friend to everyone," said Porche in response to how he would describe Blackjack. "He would always go to at least one away game and one home game. When he watned to travel, none of the coaches ever turned him down."

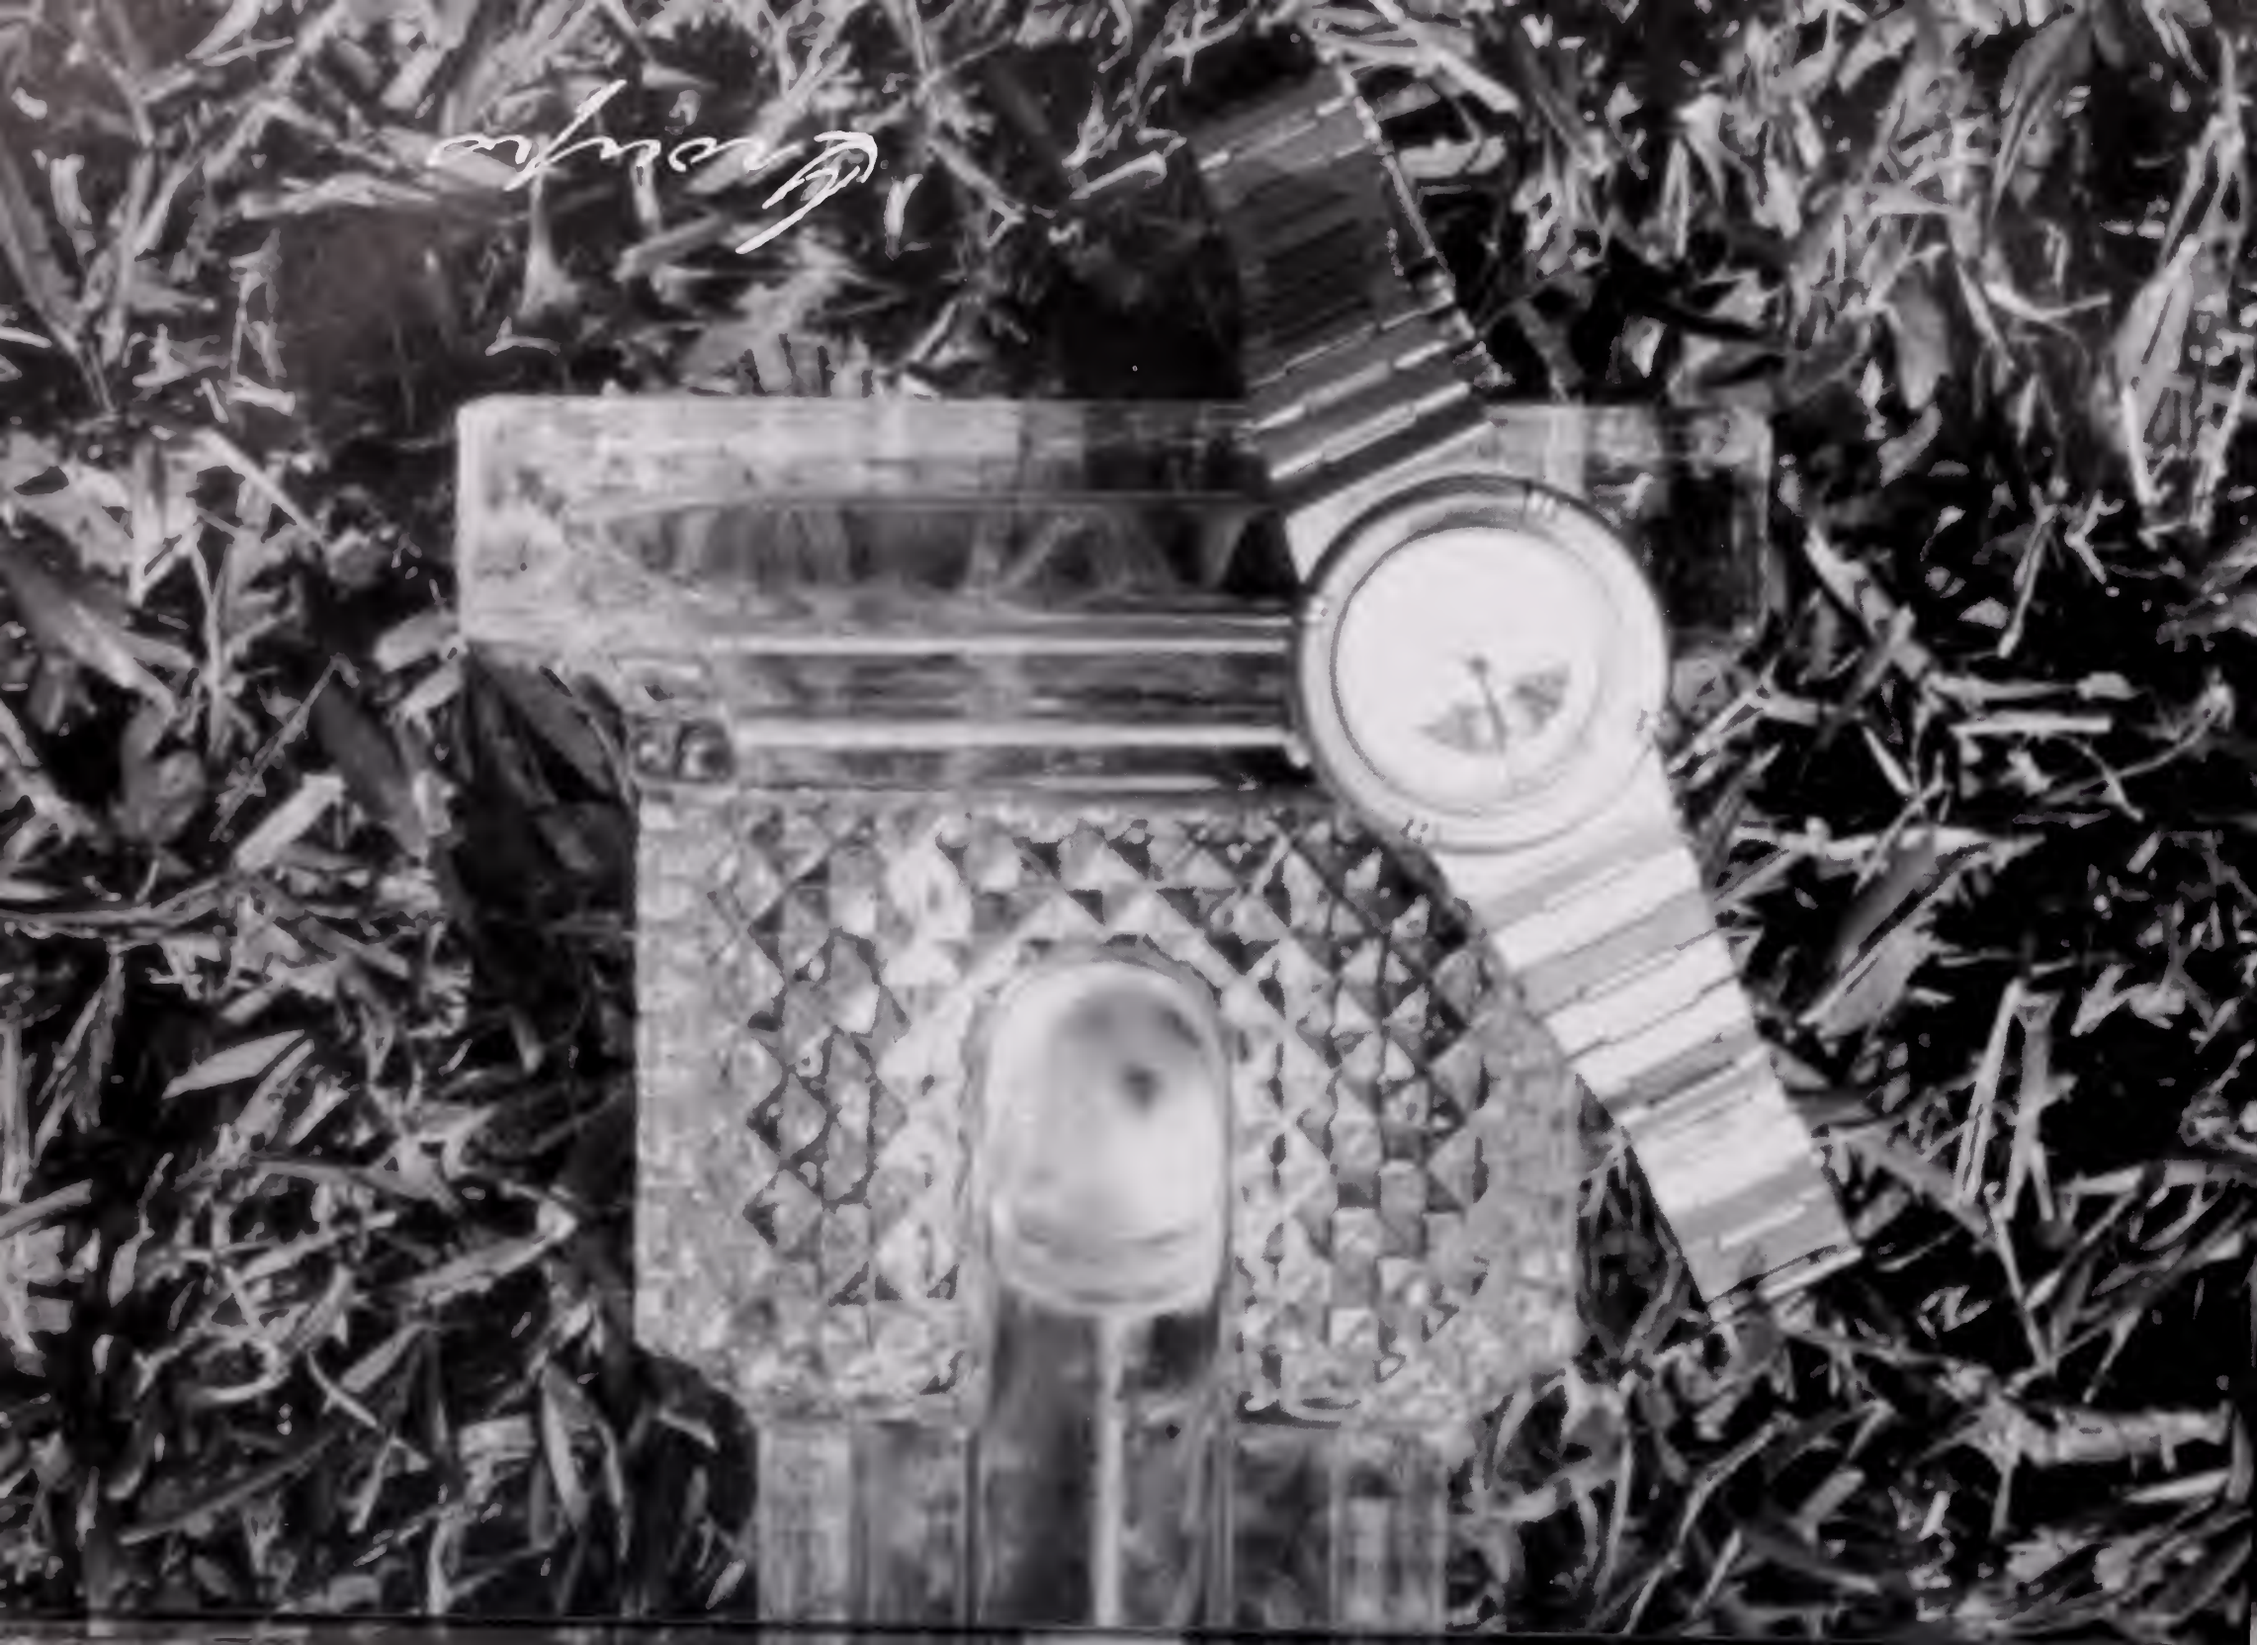

Because of his 35 years of hard work and dedication to UL Lafayette, Blackjack was honored with a the first ever honorary membership into the "S" Club Hall of Fame. He was the first non-athlete chosen for the university's most prestigious athletic award. He was inducted posthomously into the Hall of Fame at the Ragin' Cajun home football opener on Sept. 12, 1998 against Northwestern State.

Alhtough not officially inducted until September, Blackjack learned of this unprecedented honor the night before he died of colon cancer on Aug. 16, 1998. He was just 55 years old. Blackjack was a role model, and will always be remembered not just in the athletic department, but throughout the entire university.

Rachelle Dehrals tutoring at Simcoe Educational Center.

The University of Louisiana at Lafayette AmeriCorps Community Service Program is unique because it is based on a college campus. Most of the programs are located in cities, and the programs recruit all members of the community. However, UL Lafayette recruits only students.

UL Lafayette AmeriCorps accepts active students of any major who maintain a 2.0 GPA or higher, who are at least 17 years old and who have a positive attitude. The program also requires its participants to take two sociology classes and contribute at least 900 hours of community service within a calender year.

There are many benefits of AmeriCorps, including an education award of $2,362.50 (upon successful completion of service), a living allowance of $4.25 per hour and an excellent reference for future job employment. Students also benefit from service learning, which is unlike typical volunteer work in that it has an academic base.

"AmeriCorps is a cornerstone of service learning here at UL Lafayette," said Dean of Community Service Eddie Palmer. "Service learning is an enjoyable way to interact with the community. Students benefit from relationships they build with the people they meet. Students also learn and retain more because they are applying sociological theories."

AmeriCorps is a program that allows American citizens to give back to their communities. The AmeriCorps program has four main objectives: getting things done, strengthening communities, encouraging responsibility and expanding opportunity. These objectives are normally achieved through meeting various human needs such as disaster relief, public safety, and education. There are currently 30 members for the fall 1999 semester and more than 25,000 members nationwide.

Locally, members focus on educating at-risk youths. They provide one-on-one tutoring at J.W. Faulk Elementary School and N.P. Moss Middle School. Tutoring sessions are also held at the Simcoe Housing Development.

"AmeriCorps is for any student who wants to make a difference in a child's life," said Assistant Program Director Heather Reggio.

In addition to tutoring, AmeriCorps members also are required to work on at least one mini-project based on their personal interests. The mini-projects are performed as a service to local non-profit organizations such as Family Tree, The Well, Acadiana C.A.R.E.S., Acadiana Arts Council and the Lafayette Housing Authority. This semester members will go to Galiano in south Louisiana in an attempt to preserve a section of coastal marsh.

"AmeriCorps has given me the opportunity to make a difference in the community. AmeriCorps has also opened my eyes to the theory of reciprocity and has helped to diversify my character," said AmeriCorps alumni David Garrett.

President Bill Clinton developed AmeriCorps because he wanted to give Americans a way to help each other and 'get things done.' Clinton also wanted to help students pay for their education. In 1994 his two ideas were combined and became the basis for AmeriCorps. The programs compete for federal grants, and UL Lafayette has received that grant for the last five years.

The UL Lafayette AmeriCorps Community Service Program was established in 1995 by T. Joseph Savoie, Chris Williams, Gary Marotta and Eddie Palmer. Grace Alexander was the first program director.

"I wish this would have been around when I was in college because it gives ordinary college students an opportunity to gain diversity with others, as well as becoming community leaders," said Erin Butler, program director and UL Lafayette graduate.

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc., the first black Greek sorority, was founded on Jan. 15, 1908, on the campus of Howard University in Washington, D. C. Their motto is "By culture and by merit," and their colors are salmon pink and apple green. The Epsilon Beta Chapter was chartered at UL Lafayette on Dec. 16, 1967. The ladies of Epsilon Beta are a prominent force in the community today and on UL Lafayette's campus.

The projects that they regularly undertake in the community include calling bingo at Amelia Manor Nursing Home, mentoring and tutoring children at local elementary schools, visiting a wing at UMC that they adopted, and participating in the Black Santa Project. Another project that the ladies found successful and plan to continue is a teen workshop for high school girls. In memory of their sister, the late Hope L. Buford, Epsilon Beta annually awards five scholarships to high school seniors planning to attend college in music. One event that the ladies have on campus is their annual Skee Week, a week of programs for the campus and community. Another project that has been successful for the ladies thus far is the entertaining Pink Fantasy Cafe', an open-mic talent show with a candle-lit, poetry-club setting.

The ladies of Alpha Kappa Alpha are beautiful, intelligent, service oriented women who will continue to pass on their legacy of service and sisterhood and make a difference in the world locally, nationally and world wide.

Alpha Omicron Pi

Allyson Barbe and Jamie Barbe are excited for Bid Day!

ΑΟΠ

The members of Alpha Omicron Pi enjoy a sisterhood that began more than 100 years ago. With a history rich in tradition, the sorority seeks to:

* Give value beyond college years.
* Provide social experiences.
* Create, through ideals, an ever-widening circle of service.
* Develop individual potential through leadership opportunities and group effort.
* Fill the need of belonging.

AOΠ is proud of its heritage at UL Lafayette and continues to take roles in all phases of campus life. Scholarship is a top priority with sisters belonging to a variety of academic organizations such as Order of Omega, Who's Who and Rho Lambda. Membership in activities include Rajun' Jazz, Color Guard, Orientation Leaders and Diamond Darlins. Working as one for philanthropy makes giving easy. This year AOΠ awarded research grants for the study of arthritis and supported a wide variety of charitable projects. All of this required a great deal of time, commitment, and loyalty. Somehow, the sisters still found calander space for social events. The Red Rose Ball capped off a terrific year of mixers, date parties and fun.

Alpha Omicron Pi is a strong international organization and a leader in the Greek world. The Delta Beta Chapter of AOΠ is looking forward to the next millennium and another 100 years of success.

Delta Delta Delta

Delta Delta Delta was founded in 1888 at Boston University. The UL Lafayette chapter, Phi Nu, was founded on April 9, 1957. Tri Delta is represented by the dolphin. Their flower is the Pansy and their colors are silver, gold, and blue.

Delta Delta Delta's philanthropy projects focus on Children's Cancer Research, Scholarships for University Women, Delta Delta Delta/American Cancer Society Golf Tournament and an Easter egg hunt.

Their campus involvement includes activities such as Ragin' Roar, Krewe of Roux, Homecoming, Greek Week and many others. Their service projects include fraternity socials, Deltas Only, chapter retreat, Greek socials and Pansy Brunch.

Tri Delta also partook in several date parties. They were Fall Fling, Stars and Crescents Semi-Formal, Grub, Crush and a Spring Formal.

Famous people who were once active members of Delta Delta Delta are Liz Claiborne, Elizabeth Dole, Katie Couric, Leza Gibbons and Dixie Carter.

The following is an excerpt from a poem titled What is Tri Delta:

Tri Delta is challenge to achieve the best,
To go on striving beyond the rest.
It's helping a sister when you don't have a minute,
It's seeing improvement when there's effort put in it.
It's laughing and loving despite the rough spots,
It's holding your tongue when tempers get hot.
Tri Delta is giving your time and your love,
Placing yourself last and putting others above.
It's meeting new sisters wherever you go,
It's learning there's joy whenever you're low.
It's Challenge, success, trouble and fun,
Mixed in with love and rolled into one.
Tri Delta is a threshold with ideals and aims;
The more you give, the more you gain.

Tri Delta pledges relaxing on the porch.

On Jan. 13, 1913, 22 outstanding young women on the campus of Howard University founded Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc. The sorority was founded on three principles: sisterhood, scholarship and service. The goal of these young women was to provide services and programs to promote human welfare.

The Theta Xi chapter of Delta Sigma Theta was chartered in 1971 in the campus of UL Lafayette. Members of the Theta Xi chapter have held many leadership positions in the sorority and in campus organizations. They are proud to be the home chapter of the sorority's 1999-2001 Southwest Regional Representative Shawan Hagan, and the 1998-99 Louisiana State Facilitator Chelsea Barron. Theta Xi's members are represented in various campus organizations such as Gamma Beta Phi, UPC, Order of Omega, NABJ, Gospel Choir, NPHC, Greek Council, Blue Key Honor Society and Who's Who.

The ladies of Delta Sigma Theta play active roles in their community by participating in a variety of service projects which are based in the sorority's five point thrust: educational development, economic development, political awareness and involvement, international awareness and involvement and physical and mental health.

National service projects include the Delta Academy, Delta Habitat for Humanity, National Library Project, Teen Lift and Adopt a Black Business.

Local service projects include Sickle Cell Can Shake, Breast Cancer Awareness, Project Homeless, Read America, Book Drive, Bone Marrow Drive and PROLINK.

Deltas strive to create a better community environment for all mankind, as we continue in our quest for excellence.

Kappa Delta

Seniors stick together.

LET US STRIVE FOR THAT WHICH IS HONORABLE, BEAUTIFUL, AND HIGHEST.

Young women working towards strong academics, community involvement, campus leadership, close sisterhood and having the time of their lives while doing so...This is Kappa Delta.

Kappa Delta was founded in 1897 in Framville, Va. Its colors are olive green and pearl white, with the emerald and pearl as its jewels. KD's symbols are the nautilus shell and the teddy bear.

Kappa Delta's national philanthropies include the Children's Hospital in Richmond, Va., Prevent Child Abuse America, The Orthopedic Surgeon Awards and Girl Scouts of America, who Kappa Delta has most recently adopted. KDs at UL Lafayette have been working with the troops in the area to help them with projects and to earn their KD Merit Badge.

With these service projects, a full social calender and leadership opportunities galore, Kappa Deltas learn to work hard, have fun and form lifelong friendships.

At the most recent Order of Omega Greek Awards banquet, the hard work paid off. Kappa Delta Sorority was given the Dean's Choice Award for the outstanding achievements of its members.

Phi Mu sorority is the second oldest sorority in the country today. This great organization was founded in 1852 in Macon, Ga. Phi Mu was founded upon three ideals including love, honor and truth. Each member today strives to uphold these three ideals in every thing Phi Mu does.

A major part of being a Phi Mu is dedicating time to our national philanthropy: Children's Miracle Network. An annual carwash is held every spring, and all money earned is donated to Children's Miracle Network. Phi Mu also holds Big Man on Campus every year where all fraternities and sororities compete to see which organization can raise the most money for CMN. The winner gets to trade places with the dean for a day. This year, Phi Mu donated coloring books, colors and i.v. bag covers to the local children's hospital and is involved with the Bengal Tree at Christmas. The Alpha Sigma chapter here at UL Lafayette was honored for being among the top ten contributing to philanthropy chapters in the nation.

Scholarship is also a very important part of being a member. 4.0 students are awarded a medal, and last year our Phis had the highest GPA across the entire row.

While Phi Mu keeps a pretty busy schedule between philanthropic and campus activities, there is always a little time for some fun! Phi Mu is invited to socials with several fraternities with themes such as Across the Boarder and Pajama Party. Phi Mu also holds date parties every year including Fall Fiesta, Mystery Date, Crush and Carnation Ball. Members also look to forward Founder's Day Luncheon, State Day, leadership conferences and retreats every year.

Sisterhood is a very important part of Phi Mu, and we are very proud of the individuality, uniqueness and special qualities each member brings. So come join us to see for yourself all that Phi Mu has to offer.

Sigma Sigma Sigma

On April 20, 1898 eight women at the State Female National School in Farmville, Virginia cemented their ties of friendship by forming the SSS club. Thirty-one years later, the tradition continued as Tri Sigma became the very first national sorority on UL Lafayette's campus.

The Alpha Mu chapter of Sigma Sigma Sigma takes pride in our unique history and the genuine bonds of friendship that it has given us. Our sisterhood is the strongest because of our individuality. Although Sigma sisters have many common interests, we each have different dreams and goals. Tri Sigma's colors are purple and white; our symbol is the sailboat; and the open motto which we live by is "Faithful Until Death." The Sisters of Sigma Sigma Sigma promote leadership, campus involvement, academic achievement , Greek unity and a lifetime of friendship and sisterhood. You can be sure that when you're a part of Tri Sigma, you're never alone.

Tri Sigma is the only sorority on UL Lafayette's campus whose national philanthropy ties back to our history. The Robbie Page Memorial supports the development of play therapy rooms for hospitalized children. Because of our dedication to service and our loyalty to our community, former Mayor Lastrapes dedicated April 20 as Tri Sigma day in Lafayette!

Our social calendar is always busy with sorority date parties such as Crush, Grab-a-Date, Mistletoes and Beaus, Grub, and Pearl Cotillion, as well as other functions such as fraternity socials and Parent/Daughter Day. We also participate in all intramural sports, among other UL Lafayette activities.

The sisters of Tri Sigma would like to wish you the best of luck for all your years at UL Lafayette. Remember, as Tri Sigmas, we are sisters by chance and friends by choice.

Zeta Phi Beta was founded on Jan. 16, 1920 on the campus of Howard University in Washington D.C. by five honorable coeds. These women sought to establish a new organization in the precepts of scholarship, service, sisterhood and finer womanhood.

For 79 years the trail blazed by the founders has been traversed by thousands of sisters dedicated to the objectives and ideals of the sorority.

Zeta is the only organization that is constitutionally bound to a fraternity, Phi Beta Sigma, together sharing the letters ZFB. Being the only brother-sister organization, several community service projects as well as fund raisers are engaged in together every semester.

Zeta Phi Beta Sorority has a "7-point plan" of action that they began and plan to continue into the next millennium. Just a few of the community service projects of the organization and members are: MDA, Breast Cancer, Lupus, Big-Brother/Big-Sisters and adoption of the Pediatric Ward at UMC (University Medical Center).

The Zetas here at the UL Lafayette have a motto of their own, "Keep It Real."

Several men founded Alpha Phi Aplha on Dec. 4, 1906 at Cornell University in Ithica, N.Y. These seven founders called "Jewels" are: Henry Arthur Callis, Charles Henry Chapman, Eugene Kinckle Jones, George Biddle Kelley, Nathaniel Allison Murray, Robert Harold Ogle and Vertner Woodson Tandy. Alpha Phi Alpha was the first intercollegiate Greek-letter fraternity in the United States.

When the fraternity was first founded, it served as a support and study group for minority students. It was not long after the founding at Cornell that other chapters of Alpha Phi Alpha began to spring up at universities throughout the United States. The Zeta Xi chapter at UL Lafayette was founded in 1968.

The principles that Alpha Phi Alpha were founded on are scholarship, fellowship, good character and the uplifting of humanity. In addition to those principles, the brothers also found a need to correct the social injustices that African Americans faced at that time. That pursuit of excellence has helped the Zeta Xi chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha to win ALL TEN of the USL Greek Awards and Greek Man of the Year honors for the second consecutive year.

Throughout time Alpha Phi Alpha has started successful programs such as its "Go-to-High School, Go-to-College"campaign. It also fought for the suffrage of African Americans coining the famous phrase, "A Voteless People is a Hopeless People."

Several great leaders have come out of Alpha Phi Alpha. Leaders like W.E.B. DuBois, Adam Clayton Powell Jr., Thurgood Marshall, Andrew Young, William Gray, Paul Robeson, Julius Chambers and Maynard Jackson. Today Alpha Pi Alpha continues to dedicate itself in training leaders for the next generation.

Alpha Phi Alpha has established the fraternity's education and building foundations which provide scholarships for under privileged students and shelter for the homeless.

The current officers of the Zeta Xi chapter are: President Mark A. Harris, Vice President Courtney Broussard, Secretary Quentin Wiltz and Treasurer Aaron Hinkston.

Kappa Sigma

Six hundred years ago Kappa Sigma Fraternity was founded in Bologna, Italy. On Dec. 10, 1869 it was established in Charlottesville, Va. 210 chapters and 200,000 brothers make up today's Kappa Sigma.

On March 17, 1956, the Epsilon Chi Chapter was originally founded at UL Lafayette. Thanks to its supportive alumni, the chapter was re-founded in Aug. 29, 1998.

From the SGA Presidency, Vice Presidency and Senate to various university committees, SOS, IFC and Who's Who, Kappa Sigmas are leading UL Lafayette into the next millennium.

Kappa Sigmas give back to the community by helping to maintain the UL Lafayette Alumni House gardens, and volunteering for Habitat for Humanity. Other activities include Festival International de Louisiane and Sertoma Air Fest. Understanding the importance of serving the community, Kappa Sigma has adopted Big Brothers/Big Sisters as its international philanthropy.

While continuously maintaining the highest GPA of IFC, the brothers still manage to have sorority socials, Homecoming activities, tailgating, formals and a week-long series of events — the Green Party.

Through various activities, Kappa Sigmas enrich their college careers, knowing that a broader is always nearby. Scarlet Red, White and Emerald Green, Lilly of the Valley flower, and Star and Crescent all serve as symbols of this global brotherhood.

Lambda Chi Alpha

"We the men of Iota Omega Zeta, are here to succeed through strong leadership, moral responsibility and a close brotherhood, in accordance with ritual; while in the process of bettering ourselves through education and social interaction (and by having a good time doing it.)"

This is our chapter mission statement. We have been at UL Lafayette since 1962, and since 1920, Lambda Chi Alpha International Fraternity has expanded to become one of the top three national fraternities in the world.

Here at UL Lafayette, we continue the excellence by continually setting standards. Lambda Chi Alpha is consistently above the all men's GPA as well as the men's Greek average. Our athletic program is strong and diverse. Lambda Chi is active in all intramural sports.

Although these areas are important, there is one area that you can't forget in college, the parties. There is Homecoming, the Halloween Social, Luau, Un-Social, T.G.I.F. and F.A.A., all of which culminate in the spring with the wildest parties on the row, Warrior Party and Voodoo.

Brotherhood is what you make of it, and Lambda Chi Alpha takes it to the next level.

Phi Beta Sigma was formally chartered in 1914 at Howard University by A. Langston Taylor, Leonard F. Morse and Charles Brown on the principles of brotherhood, service and scholarship. The Iota chapter of Phi Beta Sigma was founded on UL Lafayette's campus in 1977.

Phi Beta Sigma's motto is "Culture for Service and Service for Humanity." Our past social activities included being instrumental in establishing national and state anti-lynching legislation in the 1930s and 1940s, in being active in the abolition of racial discrimination and segregation in employment practices in the 1950s and 1960s, along with being active in the abolition of the Jim Crow Laws. Brother A. Phillip Randolph was a key factor in the 1960s civil rights march in Washington and Brother Huey P. Newton encouraged African-Americans to rise up against the plight of mental slavery.

Famous brothers to wear Phi Beta Sigma's blue and white includ George Washington Carver, Emmit Smith, Scottie Pippen, Blair Underwood, and Quincy Jones.

ΣAE

ΣAE living it up!

ΣAE celebrate Homecoming.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity was founded on March 9, 1856, at the University of Alabama. It has grown to be the largest fraternity in the world with more than 270,000 members. The Louisiana Alpha Chapter at UL Lafayette was founded on Jan. 13, 1968. The fraternity's creed, "The True Gentleman," comes from a poem of the same name written by John Walter Wayland. It resumes the ideals and principles of SAE and strives to create a man of virtue, high ideals and confidence.

SAE is also very active in the community. They participate by volunteering at the Festival International, the Nike Louisiana OpenTour , March of Dimes at the Ice Gator Games, Walkamerica and the March of Dimes Golf Tournament.

Over the summer, thanks to our outstanding alumni support, we remodeled the interior and exterior of the SAE mansion and added a new pool room.

Besides doing philanthropy projects and improving the mansion, the brothers also made time to have great parties. Parties like a spring formal, Founder's Day, Kamanayanalaya, Homecoming and of course our greatest and oldest party, Paddy Murphy. Paddy is still, by far, the biggest Greek party in the world and also at UL Lafayette. The party celebrates the memory of Paddington Murphy, a brother who became a bootlegger during the days of prohibition and was shot by the FBI. A campus funeral procession and a back yard eulogy are just a few highlights from the annual Paddy Murphy Week.

Having fun together, helping each other and giving back to the community are just a few of the ways that SAEs disprove the fraternity stereotype and further their bond of brotherhood.

We provide the most fun in four years anyone can have, teaching how to be a leader and a scholar. We help you make friends for life. When we are done with all that, we will get a better job! SAE is not the only fraternity, it is the only one that matters.

"Brotherhood is more than just a friend, but no less than somebody you love."

Sigma Nu

Sigma Nu's White Rose Formal Cruise to Nowhere

Sigma Nu began at the Virginia Military Institute on Jan. 1, 1869. Our creed and mission is "To believe in the Life of Love, To Walk in the Way of Honor, To Serve in the Light of Truth."

On May 18, 1963, George William Morgan Wright established the Eta Nu chapter at USL. Since then, we have taken great pride in our leadership and commitment to be the best, especially in sports. Sigma Nu has repeatedly captured the Fraternity All-Sports Trophy.

Sigma Nu Brothers, while always gentlemen, love to have a good time. We hold three casual socials a semester with various sororities, date socials, a Christmas Party, a Krewe of Nu Mardi Gras Party and the End of the World Blowout. Sigma Nu is the only fraternity at USL to have an out-of-state White Rose Formal and an annual winter ski trip.

Our famous brothers include Bob Barker, Al Michaels, Harrison Ford and Archie Manning.

We also encourage all extracurricular activities on campus, especially those that develop our members' best qualities. The diversity of our chapter coupled with the strength of our brotherhood and our reputation as gentlemen allow us to excel in many areas of achievement.

Ryan Stewart, Everett Foreman, Natalie Nacol, Ross Castille, Andrew Moncla and Jason Robichaux at Whit Rose Formal

Tau Kappa Epsilon

Tau Kappa Epsilon, Fraternity of kings and presidents, welcomes all new students to UL Lafayette.

Tau Kappa Epsilon was founded on Jan. 10, 1899 at Illinois Wesleyan University and has since become one of the largest international fraternities in the world. The Omicron Chapter was founded at UL Lafayette in 1974, and was re-chartered in 1993. Today TKE is one of the largest Greek organizations on campus, adding a success to the fraternity as a whole. Tekes have held positions as SGA President, Greek Council President and Vice President, UPC members, as well as several SGA senators and committee members. Tau Kappa Epsilon is building a reputation, not resting on one.

Tau Kappa Epislon is also an active force within the community. We participate annually with our national philanthropy, The Special Olympics. Within the community, Tekes volunteer with St. Joseph's Diner, Big Brothers of Acadiana, Goodwill and the Salvation Army, as well as adopting Dupre' Library. TKE has completed more community service hours of any other fraternity on campus for the past four years. Tekes are also known for winning the prestigious Dean's Choice Award three of the past four years.

TKE also knows how to have a good time. With Homecoming, Tiki Island, Red Carnation Ball, End of the World, Hell Party, Toga Party and sorority socials, Tekes know how to have fun!

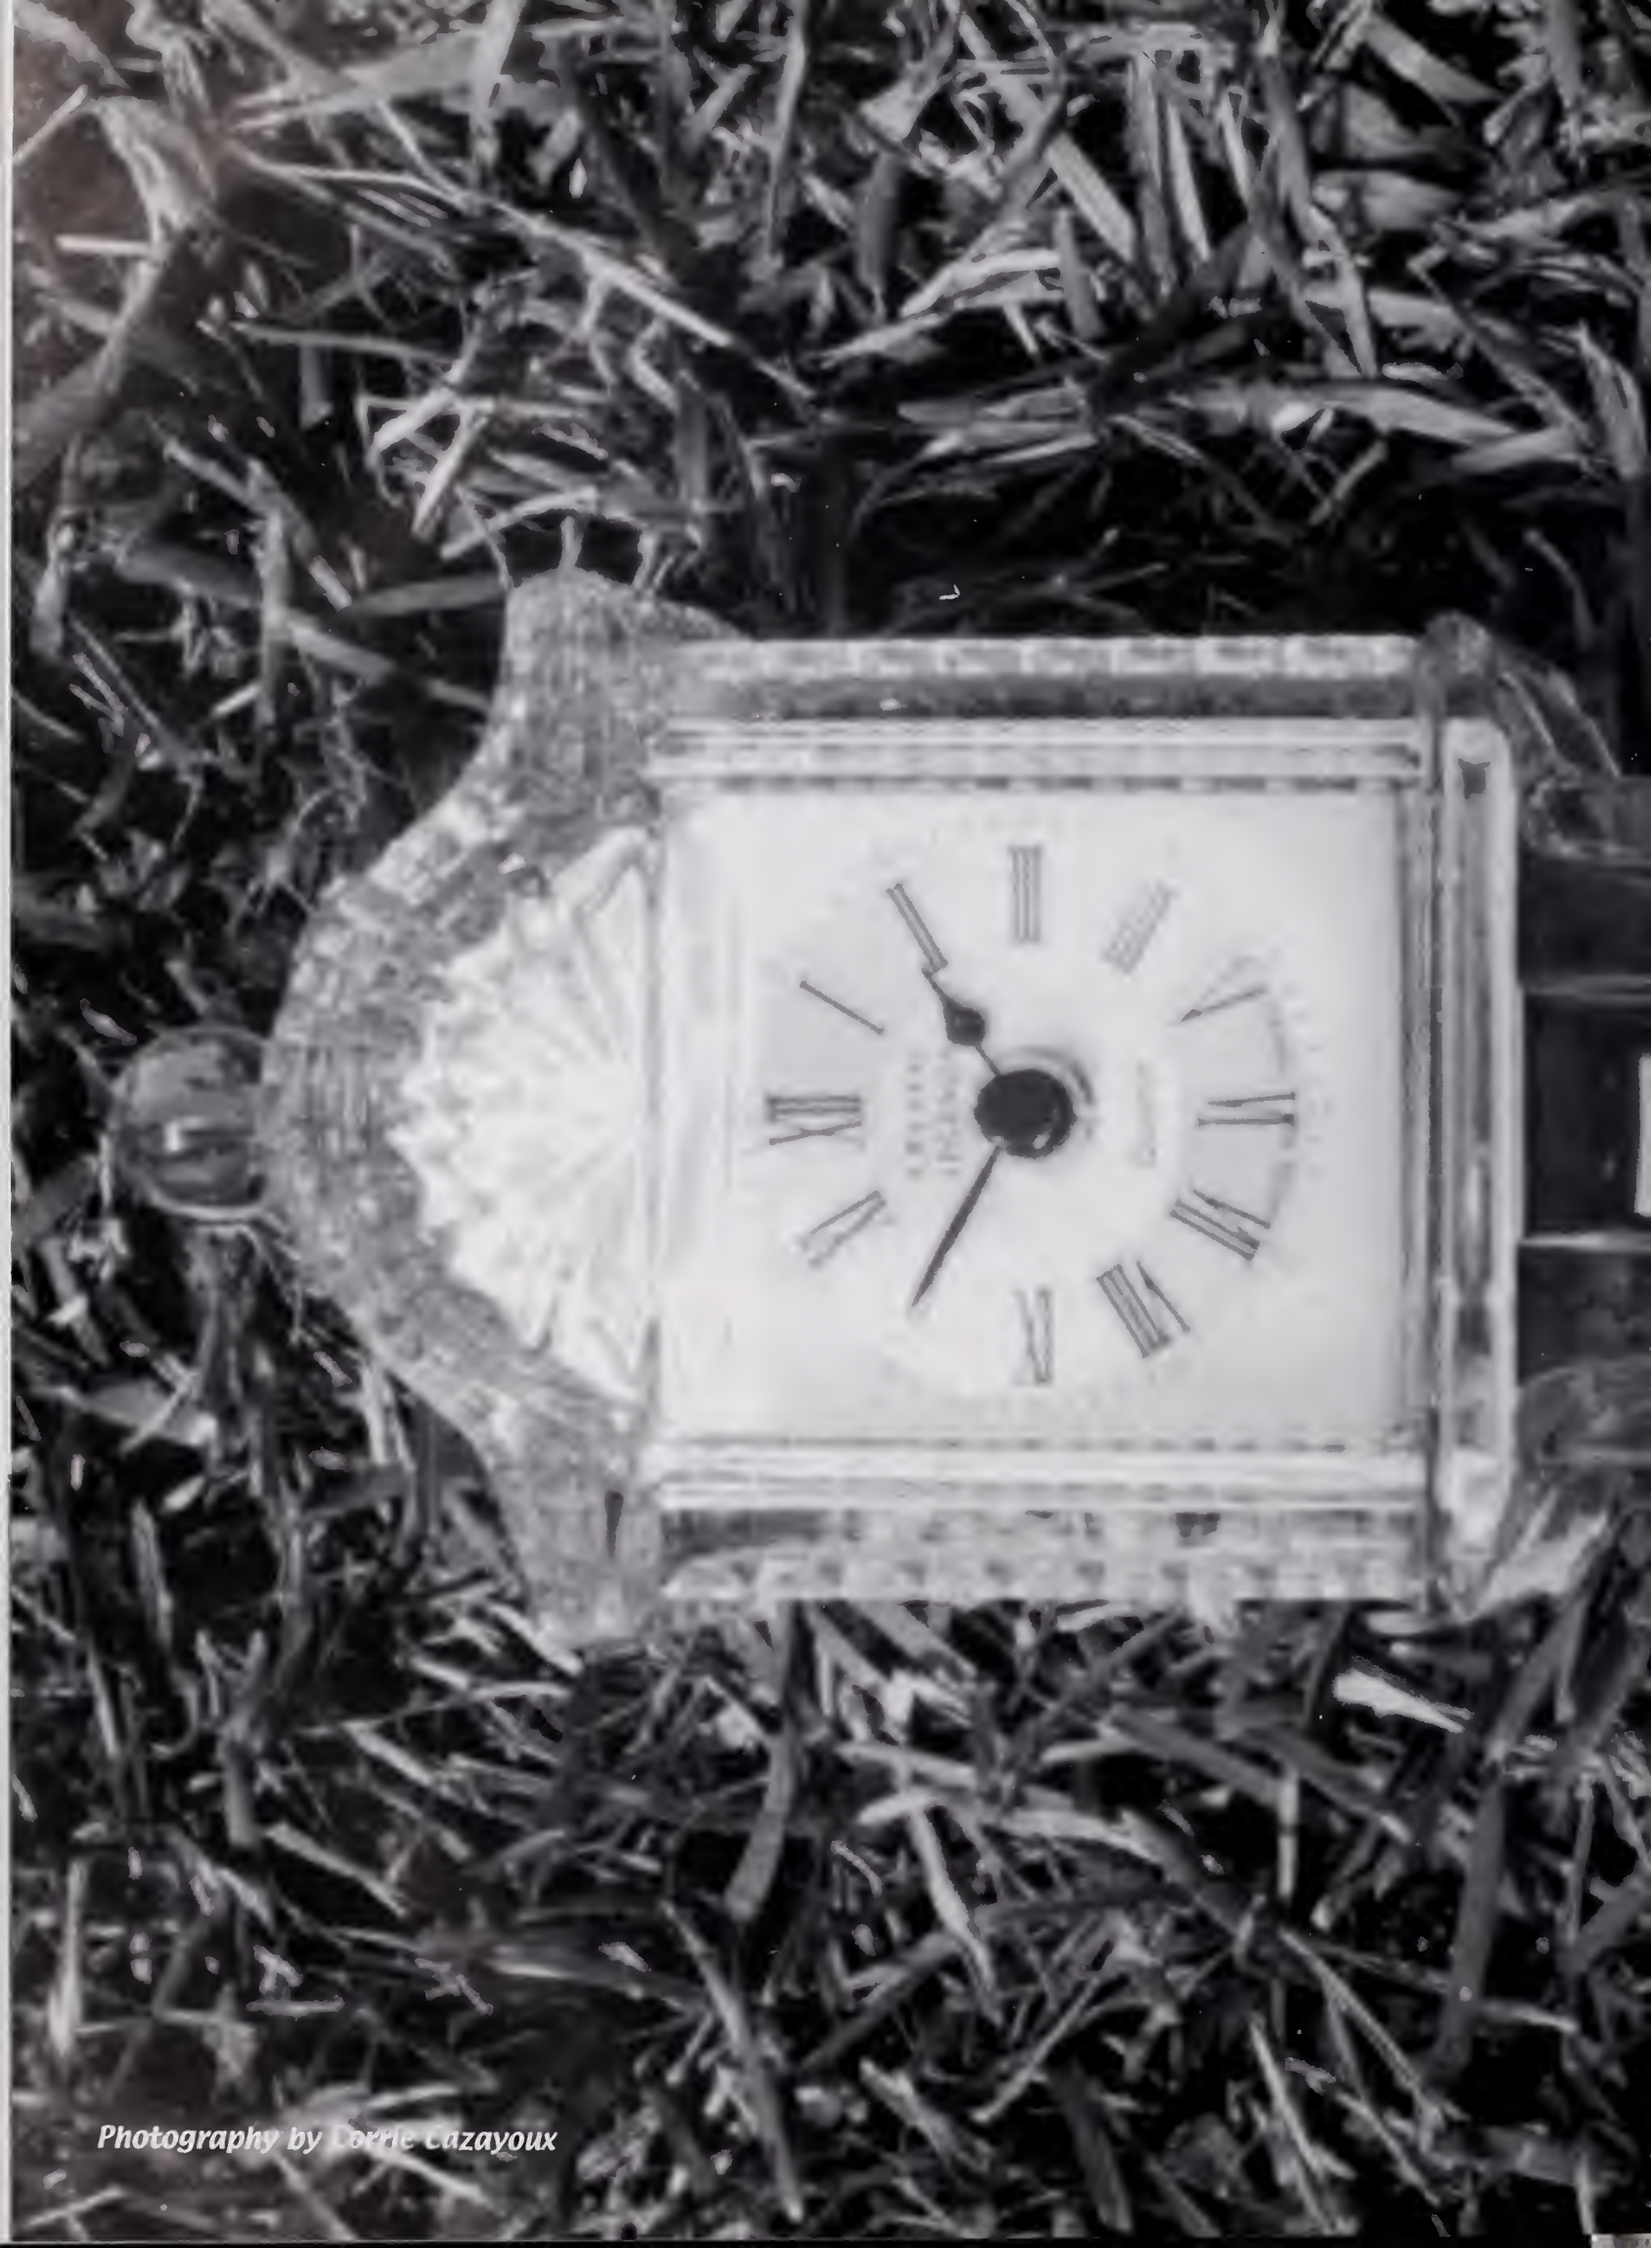

Tau Kappa Epsilon, the choice to belong, the challenge to become.

Academies

ince its very creation, Louisiana-Lafayette has been graced with strong, capable leaders who have strengthened, enlarged and bettered the university, creating the beacon of learning that it is today.

Under the current leadership of President Ray Authement, the university has continued to prosper, and many changes have been made to better the institution and its students. Change has never been more evident than this year, when feelings of pride over the past accomplishments and anticipation of a promising future were so visible on campus.

Authement credits the centennial festivities with increasing interest in this institution, not just on campus but off campus as well.

"The Centennial Celebration has raised public awareness about The University of Louisiana at Lafayette's quality and worth," stated Authement. "And, it has nurtured pride by reminding us of how far the university has come in the past 100 years."

Although now the focus is on recent advancements, change, in fact, is nothing new to Authement, whose career is marked by decisions and changes that have taken Louisiana-Lafayette into the 21st century.

While taking over as acting president in 1973 and officially taking the helm in 1974, Authement and the university were exploring the new field of computer science and the emphasis that should be placed on it.

"Some critics disagreed with the direction the university was taking, but we stayed on course," said Authement. "I believed that if one academic area was perceived as being outstanding, the university would be perceived favorably as a whole. That proved to be correct. The computer science program attracted regional and national attention, and the university earned a reputation as a progressive institution."

Other major developments under Authement's leadership include the 1974 decision to compete in NCAA Division I athletics, the 1992 designation as the first university in the state to become a Doctoral II institution, the establishment of 17 research centers to diversify the economy after the oil bust of the 1980s, the creation of University Research Park in the 1990s and most recently the change to selective admissions.

"Implementing selective admissions in the fall of 1999 was a huge step forward for the university," stated Authement. "By gradually improving the academic quality of incoming freshman, it will build a stronger student body that will, in turn, attract more blue chip faculty. Excellence breeds excellence and will continue to propel the university forward."

Of all the university's impressive accomplishments under his leadership, Authement said he believes the name change and the university's ability to use its limited resources, keeping tuition low while providing quality academic programs, are the most important achievements.

Beginning his career as a math professor, Authement said he considers his most important responsibility to the students providing an affordable, high quality education while remaining accessible to the students, addressing their concerns and interests.

"It (remaining close to the students) is extremely important," relayed Authement. "The university benefits Acadiana and Louisiana in many ways, but its primary purpose is to serve students. By staying in touch with students, we can remain focused on meeting their needs." Authement meets with representatives of the Student Government Association weekly to discuss new ideas and challenges to find solutions to problems concerning students.

One of the biggest concerns facing students is the challenge of competing in today's highly technical work force. According to Authement, the university is preparing students by providing up-to-date technological resources, providing a broad-based educational foundation, encouraging internships for practical experience and stressing communication skills.

Of the university's many strong points, Authement said he considers the faculty, its concern for the students' welfare and its relentless pursuit to better the university as the main strengths, while the lack of funding as the major area needing improvement.

Always considering the future, he said he believes the next major step the school will take is to become a Research II university, placing it in an elite group with 37 other universities in the United States that hold this distinction.

"I think the University of Louisiana at Lafayette will continue to earn regional and national respect for its academic programs and its research," stated Authement. "I am certain that it will help find solutions for environmental problems that threaten Louisiana, such as coastal erosion. I believe it will continue to be a positive force in economic development in Acadiana and the rest of the state, and the university will become an international leader in the study of cognitive sciences through its academic offerings and through the New Iberia Research Center."

Lastly, Authement provided the following words of wisdom to students.

"When faced with a tough decision, do what you know in your heart is right," said Authement. "That's not always easy, but you will look back at your life without regrets."

G A R T H A L P E R

Do not be surprised if, while muffling through the music section in Barnes & Noble, you come across a familiar name. No, not the name of your favorite rock musician, but familiar as in the man who taught your music class last semester. That's right, this teacher has been doing more than making tests, he has made a cd titled "Canvas" and plans to make another one very soon.

Garth Alper, a native of Stoneybrook, Long Island, N.Y. found his way south after after leaving his temporary teaching job at The University of Minnesota at Deluh to teach at this university.

Alper inherited his talent and interest in music from his father.

"My dad was a pianist and a music teacher, and of course I rebelled against that when I was young," said Alper. "But, then when I was about 15 I started taking lessons again, and that was it."

Alper participated in the typical teenage male right of passage (playing in a rock band), but found himself more interested in jazz once he entered his 20's. He began touring with what he described as a "funk-dance-jazz band."

"I really liked it, " said Alper. "It was fun. I got to see a lot of the country, but living out of a suitcase got old. We were on the road 50 weeks out of the year for two years."

Alper gave up touring, but not playing jazz music.

Asked why he prefers jazz, Alper responded "It's a language that speaks to me."

"Jazz is a 20th-century art form, and being a product of the 20th century, I can relate to it," explained Alper. "There is a special rhythmic feel, harmonic feel and a special melodic feel that is all unique to jazz."

Alper is especially a fan of Miles Davis, McCoy Tyner, Bill Evans and Chick Korea. He has also been influenced by his teachers.

"I studied with Jim McNeely for a while, I studied with Hal Galper, and I studied with Chuck Lamb, and those people really had an imprint on me. However, in jazz you really find your own path and you learn much more from listening to jazz musicians, but teachers can point you in the right direction, they can tell you who to listen to, who to study," said Alper, who now does just that for his own students.

College of the Arts

The College of the Arts was established in 1941 after the art department of the late 1930s was dissolved. Created by Joel Fletcher who was president of the university, it was called the fine arts department. With Charles Wonder at head, included in this new department was art, music, speech and dance. Courses were taught in painting, sculpture and graphics.

Because of the animosities between individuals in art, music, speech, and dance the fine arts department struggled to remain unified. In response to this, the art, music and speech departments were divided into separate departments in 1974. Warren Robinson was appointed head of the art department.

In 1957, the department of art was changed to the department of art and architecture, and in 1964 it was changed again to the School of Art and Architecture. At this point, sections including architecture, applied arts, and fine arts were added. In 1967, the department of music also became the school of music. In 1974 the architecture, applied arts and fine arts sections were made departments. The College of the Arts was formed and included the school of architecture, the school of music, the performing arts and the visual arts departments.

Starting out with a two-year pre-architecture curriculum in 1949, and gradually expanding into a full bachelor of architecture degree in 1955, the College of the Arts now offers professional degrees. Bachelor degrees are awarded in interior and industrial designs, architecture, fine arts, performing arts and visual arts. Master's degrees are offered also in music.

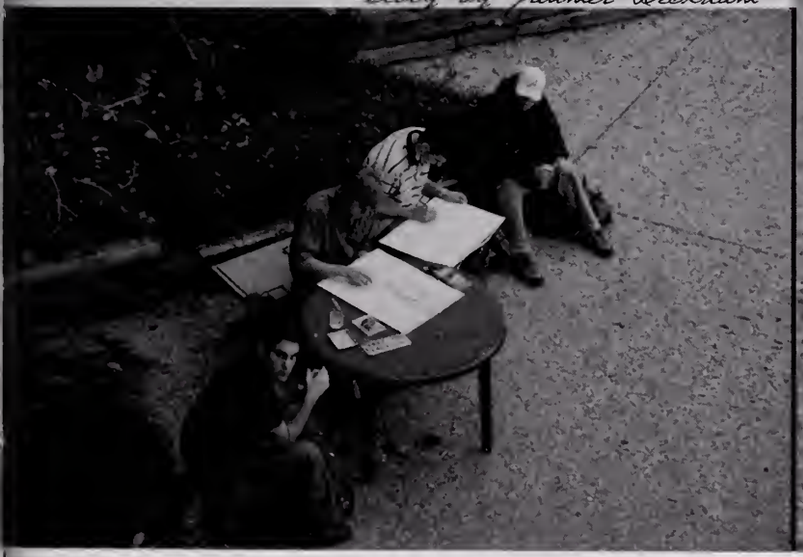

William L. Moreland was the first dean of the College of the Arts in 1957. In 1964, Warren Robinson took over as dean. After Robinson's retirement in 1977, Michel Pilet obtained the position. His resignation, six years later, opened the seat to Robert Everding, who held the position until 1984 when the present H. Gordon Brooks, II became dean.

The College of the Arts building, Fletcher Hall, is named after former president of the university Joel L. Fletcher. The building was completed in 1977. Architecture, visual arts, interior design classes and studios, as well as computer design classes are held there.

Today the School of Music has 2 faculty, the School of Architecture has 12 faculty, the Performing Arts department has 5 faculty, and the Visual Arts Department has 17 faculty. The College now has a little more than 900 students enrolled.

"Future plans for the College of the Arts include the continuation of taking the college into technology and collaborating the different departments," stated Brooks.

HAL LANGFORD

Teacher, master of ceremonies, referee, storyteller - these are jut a few of the words one can use to describe Hal Langford.

Langford serves as the head of the business systems analysis and technology department and teaches a quantitative management class. Langford also serves as a faculty advisor in Delta Sigma Pi, a business fraternity, and as a faculty representative on the Union Program Council. And no one can miss him at school pep rallies and basketball games where he serves as the emcee at half-time.

"I am very student-activity oriented, simply because I think that is one of the greatest aspects of being a college professor, being involved with students," said Langford. "And I think that if you don't like students, I am not exactly sure why you become a college professor."

Langford, who has been teaching here for 19 years, feels strongly about keeping his students interested in the subject he is teaching. He said his philosophy for teaching is he will stand on his head if that is what it takes for his students to pay attention and learn. And Langford has the ability to hold his students' attention. As probably anyone of his students can attest to, Langford has an interesting story to tell in order to help answer and illustrate any question that may be asked.

"It feels good being involved," Langford stated. "[UL Lafayette] has a great feeling of community... it feels good being on this campus."

Outside of his school involvements, Langford is involved in many activities in his church and community. He serves as an elder, song leader/worship minister at Trinity Bible Church. He also takes his teaching abilities into the Sunday-school classroom at Trinity. He is involved in some community economic activities and is on the Louisiana Capital Certified Development Company's loan committee. Along with all this, he somehow finds time to referee for the Lafayette Youth Soccer Association and some high school soccer.

One of the many things the South Caroiina native loves about Louisiana is the close-knit, family-oriented culture. He also enjoys many other cultural traditions such as Mardi Gras, but clearly one thing takes place before these - the food.

"How can you not like the food in south Louisiana?" asked Langford.

College of Business

"The College of Business has had more valedictorians than in any year before,"said Michael Fronmueller, dean of the college of business administration. "This clearly shows that we have some of the best students."

The mission of the College of Business Administration is to provide quality educational programs for students to succeed in business careers.

The Department of Business began in 1902 when UL Lafayette was Southwestern Louisiana Institute. During this time, the department was located in the College of Liberal Arts. In 1926, the Bachelor of Science in Business Administration was awarded.

The College of Commerce broke away from the College of Liberal Arts in 1952. In 1980, the name of the college was officially changed to the College of Business Administration.

The college's bachelor's and master's degree programs were accredited in 1996. Some consider this one of the college's greatest accomplishments. Today the college contains contains five departments.

The marketing and legal department is is headed by James Underwood. This department specializes in teaching students in understanding, measuring and satisfying buyer needs for products and services.

The management department works to provide students with a foundation in quality management, organizational behaviors, production issues related to products and services, human resources issues, international business and overall policy and leadership issues. This part of the college is overseen by Steve Knouse.

Anthony Greco leads the economics and finance department. This department trains students in corporate finance, investment and security analysis, while the insurance and risk management degree prepares students with knowledge in personal selling, corporate home office operations and risk management.

The accounting department focuses on auditing, income tax and managerial and government accounting. Students in this curriculum often become certified public accountants. Ellen Cook heads this department.

The last department in the College of Business is the business systems, analysis and technology department that trains students in the areas of business statistics, information systems, production management and office systems.

"As dean, I am tremendously proud of their accomplishment as an accredited business school,"said Fronmueller. "The College of Business Administration exemplifies the true meaning of excellence."

PAULA BROUSSARD

Paula Broussard, originally from Magnolia, Ark., moved to Lafayette during the oil boom when her father was transferred. As she grew, she entered college at then USL. Like many college students, she did not enter into college knowing exactly what she wanted to do. During her college career, Broussard studied to enter professions like journalism, physical therapy and medical technology. Eventually she gave nursing a try.

"I hadn't even given it [nursing] a thought. I just thought I would try it to see what the curriculum was like, and it grabbed me" stated Broussard. Twenty-two years later, she is still a nurse and enjoys it as much as ever. She specialized in critical care, and for the past 17 years Broussard has taught in the College of Nursing where she was once a student.

Broussard said that one of the things which has kept her here at the university for as long as it has is the constant challenge.

"The challenge to learn and grow every day...I can't present myself as a teacher or instructor if I don't stay abreast on current trends and knowledge," said Broussard. " I think teaching keeps me motivated - it's a challenge every day and that's what I love about it."

As far as the students, Broussard finds the hardest thing for them to deal with is balancing supporting themselves and their families if they are married while keeping as much emphasis as is needed on grades and classes.

Broussard has many wonderful memories of her teaching career.

"Most of them have been with students, and more often than not they were in clinical where we have those moments when something really profound happens with patients," said Broussard. "I am just thankful that I was there to experience it with the student."

Outside of teaching, she still practices nursing during the summer. While she has not worked in critical care for five years now, she has done work with the elderly.

In addition, Broussard's family keeps her very busy.

"I have two teenage daughters and they keep me very busy. My husband and I love to fish and garden." To top off the teaching and the family, Broussard somehow finds time to to study because she is now trying to finish her doctorate.

If by some chance Paula ever has a free moment, her favorite place to go on campus is to Cypress Lake.

"It's very peaceful - it's so pretty. I think it's very visually appealing and very calm," Paula explained.

"The College of Nursing and Allied Health Professions has a proven record of success and will evolve and grow to meet the needs of Acadiana's health care needs into the millennium," said Gail Poirrer, dean of the College of Nursing and Allied Health.

The College of Nursing was founded in 1951. Since then, the college has graduated more than 2,000 students. Its name was changed to the College of Nursing and Allied Health in October of 1999.

"The college name change to that of the College of Nursing and Allied Health Professions places this college at a new level of recognition and better reflects its current organizational structure," Poirrer remarked.

The college's dental hygiene program was recently added. It is a joint effort between UL Lafayette and Louisiana State University's School of Dentistry. This is the first program of this nature to be offered in southwest Louisiana.

The college has four degrees available. They are the bachelor's of science in nursing, an associate's of science in emergency health science, bachelor's of science in dental hygiene, and master's of science and nursing with a concentration in high-risk home health.

There are three departments within the college of nursing. The department of nursing is headed by Melinda Oberleinter. Sheryl Gonsoulin is the department head for emergency health science. The coordinator of the master's of science in nursing program is Carolyn Delahoussaye.

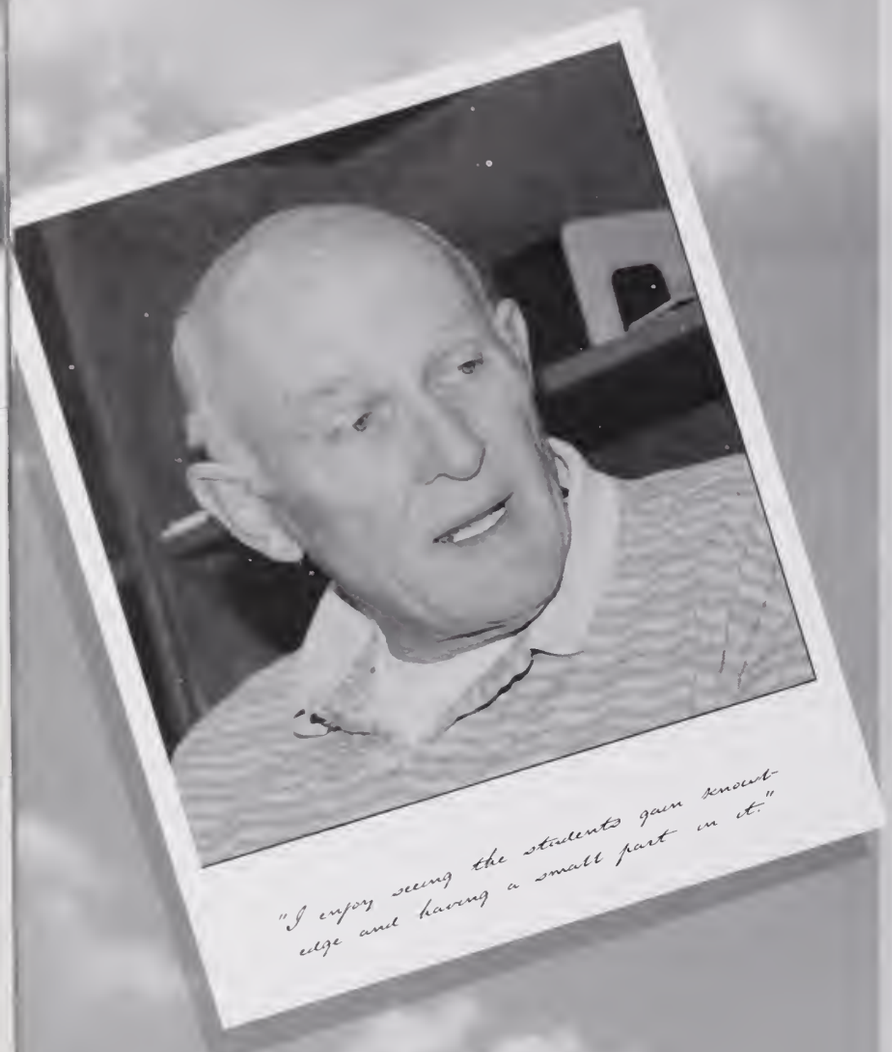

"I want to express appreciation to students, faculty and staff of the College of Nursing and Allied Health Professions for their commitment to learning and excellence," Poirrier said.

RICHARD SCOTT

"I just got interested in mechanical-type things," said Richard Scott of his decision to become an engineer. Scott, 66, became interested in those "mechanical-type things" during his four years in the engineering division of the Navy during the Korean War. After leaving the military, Scott attended the University of Mississippi where he earned a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering. He went on to work for Proctor and Gamble for two years before attending the University of Alabama where he obtained a master's degree and then a doctorate in engineering mechanics.

"I had a lot of respect for the teachers I had," said Scott. "I had many good teachers who helped me quite a bit." Scott said that these teachers were role models who influenced his decision to enter the teaching profession.

He began his teaching career at Wright State University in Dayton, Ohio in the engineering systems department where he stayed for five years. He then decided to come to what was then USL because of a close friend who worked in the mechanical engineering department.

Scott, an Alabama native, has come to appreciate the uniqueness of Southwestern Louisiana.

"The culture is good. I like the culture, and I like the people. I don't think I could point to any one thing," Scott said when describing his reasons for staying at UL Lafayette.

Scott declared that he has come to believe that the best approach to learning is by using a hands-on method of teaching.

"I prefer to involve the students with questions as we go along so that they are involved in the course," said Scott. He said that he also tries to stress the fundamentals of a course so that students leave his class with an understanding of the subject that can be built upon in future classes.

"They can see that it's not just flimflam that we're teaching them," stated Scott. He said that he wants students to understand that they are not just memorizing facts, but learning fundamentals that will help them in their future professions.

Scott said that he enjoys watching students gain confidence as they begin to understand a subject.

"I enjoy seeing the students gain knowledge and having a small part in it. To see them become confident young men and women is satisfying," declared Scott.

Scott spends his spare time doing woodwork. He builds decorative benches, shelves, cabinets, and toys.

It seems that from teaching students the fundamentals of a course to relaxing in his free time, Richard Scott enjoys a hands-on approach to life.

"All our students are positioned so they can contribute effectively to all aspects of economic development, especially in this state," said Anthony Ponter, dean of the College of Engineering.

The College of Engineering includes six undergraduate degree programs in engineering and one associate program in industrial technology.

The electrical engineering degree offers a computer engineering option and a telecommunications option. Students are prepared for jobs at electrical companies, architectural engineering firms, general plant engineering and electrical engineering jobs involving instrumentation and control in the oil and petrochemical industries. The Electrical and Computer Engineering Department is lead by Robert Henry.

The Mechanical Engineering Department is headed by William Simon. This degree program has a computer-aided design/manufacturing concentration. With this degree, graduates often enter the work force as designers, builders and testers of industry equipment, constructing robotic devices, rockets, nuclear engines or steam and nuclear power plants.

Chemical engineering prepares students for jobs in the oil and gas, refining, petrochemicals, pulp and paper, textiles, energy conservation, corrosion and biochemical industries. James Garber is in charge of this department.

Robert Wang leads the Civil Engineering department. It concentrates on designing, constructing and operating highways, streets, airports, pipelines for oil and gas transportation, bridges, dams and levees.

Petroleum engineering teaches students about drilling, completing and recovering oil and gas from the subsurface using wells. Herman Rieke heads this department.

Frank Trocki heads the Industrial Technology Departments. Its curriculum focuses on Computer integrated manufacturing, mechanical and fluid power, electronics and computers, information technology and construction.

"All of our graduates are immediately employable and employed," said Burke Huner, an associate professor in electrical and computer engineering. Ninety percent of our students choose to work in the private sector while 10 percent go to graduate school. Much to our credit, most of the students continue graduate school here."

The college emphasizes economic development through telecomunications, manufacturing, transportation and other aspects of engineering. The college boasts a 100 percent employment rate for its graduates.

"All men should strive to learn before they die what they are running from, and to, and why," said James Thurber. This is one of the many quotes that decorates the office of Irvin Esters, the head of the school counseling program at UL Lafayette.

Esters, originally from Elton, La., said that he came to Lafayette three years ago to be closer to family, and also for "the opportunity to take a program that had a lot of potential and realize that potential."

"I get bored very easily. I'm hyperactive. My attention span is that of a gnat," admitted Esters. "I like to go in and get things started."

Ester said he saw potential in a counseling program that had little student and faculty involvement. Improving the program and working toward accreditation has kept his attention.

From a farming family, Esters saw teaching as a way out of a poorer community.

"That was one of the things I saw as a way of introducing myself into the middle class and getting a job that would be rewarding for more things than going out and just being able to shovel a levee," said Esters.

He later realized that teaching was more than an escape from poverty.

"That was the original intent, but I stayed in public school teaching for more than six years for a totally different reason. I enjoyed affecting people's lives. It was probably the only way that I could do that," stated Esters.

"I think that you should challenge everything," said Esters. He says he wants students to leave his class feeling they have learned something.

Esters said that he feels challenging beliefs, ideas and even professors is part of the learning process. He encourages students to challenge him in the classroom and to challenge themselves as well.

"In the counseling courses, a lot of what I teach is almost self-discovery because you can't really be a counselor unless you understand the kinds of things that you are experiencing yourself," said Esters.

"They learn, I hope, to apply what they've learned to their lives in general," stated Esters. "If you don't apply it, you're not really learning it."

He says that he demands participation from students. He says that he hopes to be a role model through his teaching. Believing that service is important, he sets an example by participating in college committees and professional organizations.

When asked how long he plans to remain at UL Lafayette, Esters displays what appears to be a typically restless spirit by replying, "I don't know. It just depends!"

College of Education

The College of Education,which began in 1921,was one of the first colleges to appear on campus. Students taught at the SLI training school for experience, and then went on to teach throughout the state.

Today the college houses elementary, secondary, health and physical, and special education, as well as sports related fields such as sports medicine, kinisiology and exercise science. Speech pathology is also in this college.

The College of Education offers master's degrees in almost all majors, and is in the discussion process of offering doctoral degrees.

The shortage of teachers makes teaching a profession with many job availabilities. In the spring 2000 semester, there were 2,256 students enrolled. The most persued major is elementary education.

By 1936, the College of Education included geology and music. Audio-Visual was added in 1954, special education in 1956, education in1959 and health and physical education 1976.

Irving P. Foote was the first dean of the College of Education. Succeeding him was James Monroe Smith, W.S. Dearmond, Maxim Daniel Doucet, Robert E. May, Howard Turner, Laurence B. Green, Gaston Louis, Robert Ducharme, Robert Alciatore, Mary Ford, and the current Dean is Lucindia Chance.

This semester the College of Education has added two new programs. One is the professional development school program. This program intends to bring practicing teachers together with university faculty in partnership with a focus on simultaneous renewal of the teacher education programs and improvement of student performance in schools.

The other program, the international program, gives teachers the opportunity to go to another country for two weeks, live with an international teacher's family, and teach at their school.

" I enjoy watching students blossom, watching them figure things out, watching them see the connection between different things they learn," stated Janet Frantz. "I also enjoy the fact that I get to read and research, and I get to figure things out. My job is never boring."

Frantz is an associate professor of political science. She teaches American national government survey courses and upper level public policy courses. Frantz has been teaching at the University of Louisiana at Lafayette since 1984.

"I really enjoyed the university so much when I went there myself," Frantz responded when asked why she wanted to teach at the this level. "I enjoyed the debates, the readings and the searching for answers."

"My research has to do with the closing down or the shutting down of public programs," Frantz explained. She has focused particularly on a Leprosarium in Carville, La. that has recently closed after 50 years.

Frantz attended Emporia State University in Kansas where she earned a bachelor's degree of science in education. She earned a master's and doctorate of political science.

Carl and Janet Frantz have been married for 33 years. Her husband is the director of research and sponsored programs here at UL Lafayette. Frantz, who is originally from Anthony, Kan., met and married her husband while in undergraduate school.

"He's 6 feet 10 inches tall. He told me that he was an athlete and I asked him what sport. He told me that he was on the varsity basketball team, but I wasn't smart enough to figure that out for myself. I went to a lot of basketball games after that though," said Frantz.

Frantz is involved with various campus activities. She is the sponsor of Blue Key and Pi Gamma Mu. Also, she is currently the university's representative for the Truman Scholarship.

Frantz also takes part in organizations in the community. She is on the curriculum committee of the Leadership Lafayette Program. She is the secretary of the Bayou Girl Scouts' Council Board of Directors. She is also a member of the board of the Lafayette Public Library Foundation. In addition to this plethora of activities, Frantz is also an elder in the First Christian Church.

Frantz said she considers her coworkers and students as the best part of her job.

"I really like my department and my colleagues," Frantz related with a smile. "I have also enjoyed, a great deal, the student body. There is a rich variety of students who I have never worked with before.

College of Liberal Arts

The College of Liberal Arts consists currently of 15 degree programs, including communication, communicative disorders, criminal justice, English, modern languages, history and geography, philosophy, political science, psychology, sociology and anthropology.

In addition to bachelor's degrees in these areas, the criminal justice department offers an associate of science and English. History, modern languages, communicative disorders and psychology offer master's degrees. The English department awards doctoral degrees and the college bestows one of only three doctorates in Francophone studies in the world.

The College of Liberal Arts was created in 1921 as the first step in the reorganization of the Southwestern Louisiana Institute. The newly formed college encompassed all areas of instruction that did not have specific reference to teacher training. As the college grew and the need developed, the various departments were formed.

From units within the College of Liberal Arts, there were established the College of Agriculture in 1938, the College of Engineering in 1940, the College of Nursing in 1952 and the College of Commerce in 1952. Until July 1974, the college embraced the departments of aerospace studies, biology, chemistry, English, foreign languages, history and philosophy, mathematics, microbiology, physics, social studies and speech, and the schools of arts, architecture and music.

In July 1974, the College of Liberal arts was divided into the College of Arts, Humanities and Behavioral Sciences and the College of Biological, Mathematical and Physical Sciences. The School of Art and Architecture left the college in 1983, and the college was renamed the College of Liberal Arts in 1993.

PATRICIA HOLMES

"It's really been a great experience. I've taught in other places, even out of the country, but nothing beats my experience here," declared Patricia Holmes, communications professor.

And Holmes has a plethora of schools to compare this university to.

Currently, she is helping to organize a study abroad program in the African country of Ghana. Students will live at the University of Ghana at Legon for eight weeks in the summer and take courses with UL Lafayette professors that will count toward graduation credit, as would any class taken here.

"We picked Ghana because it is a very stable African country and it is historically a country that is rich with tradition and culture," explained Holmes. "Also, there is the University of Ghana at Legon (a suburb of Accra, the capital.)"

Foreign study programs are nothing new to Holmes. While teaching at the University of Missouri, she organized a similar program and found that students enjoyed and benefited from such programs.

"Studying abroad broadens the horizon, but not only that," said Holmes. "We see that there is such a big world out there, and although we are all alike, we see our differences and learn to appreciate them by embracing a different culture and way of life that many times is very different from our own.

Holmes added that it also makes most students more appreciative of the lifestyles they are able to live.

"It really makes us appreciate our own culture and the United States because we find that we are very fortunate and have been blessed with many more opportunities than others," said Holmes. "Traveling is education itself."

Holmes is also active with the students as faculty advisor of UL Lafayette's chapter of the National Association of Black Journalists.

Holmes said she believes that the biggest problem college students have is a lack of direction, but she sees this as an opportunity for herself to help students.

She has also been busy authoring "Broadcasting in Sierra Leone."

"It addresses the history of broadcasting in that country," explained Holmes. "I chose Sierra Leone because it was the first African nation to have a broadcasting system."

Holmes is considering writing a travel guide for students who want to study abroad as her next project.

The College of General Studies was designed in the summer of 1980 with the approval of a Bachelor of General Studies degree from the Board of Regents. This college has always been appealing to students who change their majors late in their career, and it has been noted for its high degree of flexibility since its beginning.

Arts and humanities, natural sciences, behavioral sciences, applied life sciences and applied sciences-business are the five majors or concentrations that comprise the College of General Studies. These concentrated areas are known as blocks, and a minimum of 12 semester hours must be completed in each of at least three concentrated areas. There are approximately 900 students enrolled in the College of General Studies.

The College of General Studies offers a two-year, 64-hour associate degree and a four-year, 132-hour bachelor's degree. This college is strictly devoted to undergraduates, and because of its interdicisplinary cirriculum, students must take courses in a variety of areas.

Dean Phebe Hayes and her assistant Kay Riedel run the department, spending a large amount of time advising students.

Housed within the College of General Studies is the department of special services. It originally administerd four trio programs and has been enhanced with two additional programs recently. Student Support Services, Upward Bound, Veterans' Upward Bound and Talent Search are the original programs. Another Upward Bound and The Ronald McNair Post Baccalaureate Achievement Program are the two that were later added. These six programs provide support services to economically disadvantaged, first-generation college students.

"We have aggressive plans that are being worked on and will be revealed shortly," stated Hayes. "We are constantly searching for ways to inhance the educational experiences of our students."

"I don't even believe in teaching," stated Louis Houston calmly. The UL Lafayette physics professor confessed that he did not originally intend to be a teacher.

Houston said that he came to what was then USL in 1994 to do research and to be nearer to his parents who live in Lafayette.

"I wanted to be able to do research in a creative atmosphere," Houston stated. Houston graduated from USL in 1979 with a bachelor's degree in physics. He earned one of the first honors degrees at the university. After several years of teaching, Houston said that he has developed an unusual method of approaching his profession.

"I didn't know what to do in the beginning. Over the years I've decided that the best way to teach is not to teach. I'm a guide and then I try to get them interested in some information," Houston stated.

Houston said that he believes in a relaxed atmosphere in the classroom.

"I have this casual thing. I wear shorts. It's very informal," declared Houston. "There's no value difference between a teacher and a student. I find that when students are treated as important people they respond, they become more creative and more interested," he added.

Houston said that he encourages self-empowerment and self-actualization.

"I always tell them never to trust anything until you've checked it out, until you have a reason to believe it's true," Houston said.

"I can scare students," Houston said with a smile. "I'm a very intense person in the sense that I can throw a lot of energy out very quickly."

Houston also said that he seems to be a popular professor although he is not quite sure as to the key of his popularity.

"I have eight o'clock classes and I get almost everyone showing up. Even when it's raining. I don't even know why they show up," said Houston with an air of disbelief.

"I don't believe in grade pressure. I try to reduce grade pressure as much as I can," said Houston. He said that he believes that gaining knowledge is more important than earning a grade.

In his spare time, Houston plays classical and jazz guitar. He also sings and composes his own works.

"I'm into physics and mathematics. I'm also into music," said Houston. "I'm kind of like out there in the local musical scene," he added shyly.

Houston has a CD titled "Rendezvous" for sale at several local businesses.

To sum up what he wants students to know about him, Houston said, "I guess I want to say that students are my friends. Not all of them are good friends, but they're all my friends."

College of Sciences

With the subdivision of the College of Liberal Arts into two units in 1974, the College of Sciences was created. The departments included the Biology, Chemistry, Computer Science, Mathematics and Statistics, Microbiology, Physics, and Aerospace Studies. It also was the home for the U.S. Air Force ROTC program.

In May 1975, David Andrew was appointed the first dean of the new college. Succeeding his 10 years of service was Sigred Lanoux who served as dean for seven years until his decision to return to the chemistry faculty on a full-time basis. Current dean Duane Blumberg was chosen for th position in 1992.

Since the development of the college, UL Lafayette has seen remarkable growth of the college's programs and activities. This has become a nationally recognized institution known for its graduate and research programs, as well as for its traditional strengths in undergraduate education. The College of Sciences has played a major role in advancing the scholarly reputation of the university and the quality of its advanced programs.

Today the college consist of eight departments. They include biology, chemistry, computer science, geology, health information management , mathematics, physics and military services (the U.S. Army ROTC succeeded the discontinuation of the Air Force program in 1990).

The College of Sciences offers bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees in several areas of study. The department of biology and mathematics offers all three. Bachelor's and master's degrees are offered in the departments of geology and physics. The Center for Advanced Computer Studies offers a master's and doctoral degree. The departments of chemistry and computer science offer only a bachelor's degree, and the Institute for Cognitive Sciences only offers a doctorate. The college also offers a several programs designed to prepare students for professional schools. These areas of preparation are: dentistry, medical technology, medicine, occupational therapy, optometry, pharmacy, physical therapy and other allied health professions.

"This is a very research-oriented college," stated Dean Duane Blumberg.

The College of Sciences is now working towards developing a joint project with the English Business Administration called the Energy Institute. This project will hopefully increase the university's research activities in oil and gas industries.

GRIFF BLAKEMAN

As an undergraduate, Griff Blakewood had no concrete idea what he wanted to do.

Though his graduate work focused on animal physiology and increasing the populations of endangered species, part of Blakewood's job at Temple University centered on human reproduction. He soon realized that this was contrary to his beliefs and his desire to save the earth.

After thinking about it, Blakewood concluded that as an educator he had the potential to have much more of an impact on the environment than as an employee actually performing an environmental job. So, he sought employment in the renewable resources department at UL Lafayette.

Blakewood said he feels that he is not here to transfer information to a class of students, rather, that he is here in a community of learners working together to figure out how six billion humans can sustain the quality of life on our planet.

"Whether it is installing solar panels, alternative energy systems or even a new transportation technology," said Blakewood, "those sorts of jobs where they actually change some of the ways we do things on a large enough scale to make a real difference, that's my vision for our graduates."

Students can find Blakewood outside near the swamp on sunny days relaxing and reading books.

"I do like, on favorable days, to take some of my books and go sit out near the swamp. It's just a really wonderful resource to have on campus - something that although not completely natural, it's pretty close to a native ecosystem and it's just a really nice place to be," said Blakewood.

Although he truly enjoys his work and the university, he still sees room for improvement, especially with universal question of transportation. Blakewood realizes that this is a city-wide problem, but said he believes that the school should be a leader in organizing bicycle lanes and his long-range goals include a light rail system.

Through it all, Blakewood said he hopes that one day his students will start their own businesses, becoming "green entrepreneurs" who will find a financially feasible way to increase the sustainability of life on Earth.

Outside of school, Blakewood stays busy with his wife and two boys. He likes to spend time with them because his children "are young enough to think that their dad is still cool."

Also, Blakewood said he enjoys being a member of a garage band that he described as "a bunch of middle aged guys who wish they were rockers and ... get together and play some music."

The seeds which were to become the College of Applied Life Sciences were planted within two years of the university's founding. The College of Applied Life Sciences is now divided into human resources and renewable resources. Human resources majors include dietetics, child and family studies, apparel design and merchandising and hospitality management.

Majors in renewable resources include agribusiness, pre-agricultural engineering, animal science, environment and sustainable resources, pre-forestry, pre-veterinary, vocational education and agricultural education. The College of Applied Life Sciences offers a bachelor's degree in all of these areas.

The sustainable paradigm initiated in renewable resources has now become the unifying vision of the entire college. Its purpose is to build relationships between people and the natural world which can nurture healthy individuals, families and communities now and for the future.

"We were one of the original degree programs when the university opened and have been an important part of the university with two of our deans becoming president. We feel we have the potential of being a vital force of the University of Louisiana," stated Dean Linda Vincent.

The program was founded in 1938 as the College of Agriculture and Human Resources, even though courses in this area had been taught since the beginning of the university. Home economics (domestic science) was included as one of the first courses offered in 1901. An agricultural course was added during the 1903-04 session, and in 1907, President Edwin L. Stephens initiated the development of a government demonstration farm which was located where the heart of the school, Cypress Lake, is now located. Students raised farm animals and vegetables there.

Under the leadership of Joel L. Fletcher, the college's first dean, agriculture was moved to a place of prominence in the university.

Renamed in 1992 as the department of renewable resources, under Dean Lynn Desselle, the program changed its focus and direction. The department of agricultural sciences, technology and education shifted toward focusing on sustainability. The curriculum is designed to forge a more sustainable relationship with the planet and its life support systems. The curriculum in sustainable agriculture is now focused on balancing the long-term viability of food and fiber production systems with the needs of growing human population.

Yet another year has passed at The University of Louisiana at Lafayette. Throughout this time the students have experienced several events that have changed campus for ever. This is simply a reminder of some of the events during the 1999-2000 academic year.

In August 1999, students were greeted with red banners adorning street lamps, closed admissions, a centennial celebration, the news of a name change and a commemorative centennial pin. This was a time of great pride for the university, and it was represented in a majestic manner throughout the year. There was also news of the various colleges' academic showcases and the construction on Dupré Library.

There was great change in several important positions within the university. The university welcomed Lucindia Chance as the new dean of education. Michael Fronmueller took his new position as the business dean, and Jerome J. Malinowsky was named the new director of the architecture department. Sharee LeBlanc Broussard was appointed the director of the UL Lafayette Alumni Association. The hiring of Jelena Cannon marked another first for the universtiy, as she is the first female lobby supervisor.

The Jill Tompkins murder investigation continued to remain in the news. The murder at the Cajun Village married housing apartment complex severly challenged the idea of safety on campus. Tompkins' roommate, Mary Beth Dolan, was first arrested for the murder but never went to trial because of a no true bill that was handed down after a grand jury investigation. Later in the semester, physical evidence pointed to a new suspect, a male. Despite this gruesome killing, Police Chief Joey Sturm contended that the campus crime statistics fell within the normal range.

The Board of Regents matched the $920,000 that was raised to support one endowed chair and 13 endowed professorships.

UL Lafayette also announced that 94.3 percent of its programs are accredited. This, along with the rise in research conducted by the university and the new closed admissions, influenced UL Lafayette's reputation in a positive way.

On Friday, Sept. 10, the Centennial Spectacular officially kicked off the UL Lafayette centennial celebration with a certain spice that will not soon be forgotten. The utilization of the music and dance departments of the university, in addition to the participation of campus organizations in the olympic-style opening prosession made student and faculty involvement crucial to this successful event. Other centennial events were included in this kickoff ceremony such as a breakfast for students, a block party and a pep rally.

A new dental hygiene major was created. This bachelor's degree program was created to respond to Acadiana's shortage of licensed dentists. This new program is a joint effort between UL Lafayette and Louisiana State University School of Dentistry.

Three million dollars in grants awarded by the U. S. Department of Energy enabled UL Lafayette scientists to conduct research in various fields including ways to aid oil, gas and timber companies.

The first homecoming court of UL Lafayette was chosen. The members of the court included Marie DesOrmeaux (queen), Ali Guidry, Laurie Ledet, Kristy Aloisio and Michelle Carlin.

The Gay and Lesbian Alliance at UL Lafayette began a out reach program. This program was designed to help students, who wish to remain anonymous, with questions about their sexuality. Ben Carver coordinated the program.

Online registration was announced for the Spring 2000 semester. This program was designed to give students other registration options, in addition to phone registration and registering in person.

There was drama on Fraternity Row on Oct. 9. An alleged hazing incident was responsible for getting Kappa Alpha temporarily suspended from campus and for getting two students expelled.

A female student reported and on-campus date rape which occurred in a vehicle parked on campus. The woman was thought to have come forward after seeing a play in the student union entitled, "But I Said No."

The first freshman elections that were held exclusively on-line took place on Oct. 27-29. UL Lafayette astrophysicists, along with an English astrophysicist received a wide range of media attention for their potential discovery of Planet X, the 10th planet. The people responsible are John Murray from the Open University in Great Britain along with John Matese, Daniel Whitmire and Patrick Whitman of UL Lafayette.

The university continued to expand physically with a new UL Lafayette Foundation building.

Denise Flaherty caused a stir when she discovered bacteria in the restrooms in the Conference Center pool area. The junior microbiology major performed swabs on the restroom facilities after being prompted by a technical writing class. She first noticed the problem on the first day of class.

Campus thefts were reportedly on the rise in November. This prompted Sturm and Associate Dean of Students Jon Berthelot to release a statement warning students of the problem and how to avoid becoming a victim.

A memorial was erected in the honor of McNaspy Stadium, which was torn down in January of 1999. The memorial was unveiled on Nov. 20, nine months after the destruction of the structure.

Kathy Authement Prouet, daughter of the university's president, died of leukemia on Nov. 29. She was 47. A bone marrow drive was later held in her honor.

The College of Nursing changed its name to the College of Nursing and Allied Health Professions. The name was changed to better fit the college's needs after the addition of four new degree programs which include a bachelor's degree of science in nursing, a master's degree of science in nursing, an associate's degree in emergency health science and a bachelor's degree of science in dental hygiene.

The Spring semester proved to be just as eventful.

A fire in a Denbo Residence Hall elevator prompted debates on elevator safety.

Noelle Guidry was awarded the assistant directorship of the Alumni Association. She had previously interned for the organization for one-and-a-half years.

There was a significant drop in enrollment after the switch to closed admissions.

Lynda Frese, an UL Lafayette associate professor of art was awarded the 1999-2000 Artist Fellowship Award on $5,000. Frese won the award by entering her work entitled "Pagan Images from the Goddess to the Madonna."

PJ's coffee house on UL Lafayette campus awarded a $1,000 scholarship by drawing customers' names from a fish bowl on the last day of finals. The money was not for a specific area, but the person rewarded had to be a student.

Mr. and Miss Black Expo was resurrected in accordance with its 25th anniversary by the African American Culture Committee.

Steve Landry was appointed the vice president of academic affairs at UL Lafayette. This new post makes Landry responsible for the academic mission of UL Lafayette in its entirety.

Kealy Yolander, a UL Lafayette student was arrested and charged with second degree aggravated battery after cutting a woman in Harris Hall. The victim was not a student at UL Lafayette.

Judice Hall was renovated to accommodate the needs of the UL Lafayette honor's program. The department had been housed in a small area of Maxim Doucet Hall.

Guillory Hall renovations paid off with the opening of Cypress Lake Cafè. This allowed students to utilize their declining balances to buy coffee and other food and drinks. In addition, the cafè provided students with a quiet place to study or talk. A computer lab was opened in Guillory for students to write papers and will eventually go on-line.

The university GPA requirements were changed to a cumulative system that now counts repeats. This means that the grade for a course that was repeated will not be replaced with the more recent grade, rather, both grades will appear on your transcript and be figured into the cumulative average. This provides a larger risk for students to be put on academic probation.

UL Lafayette was the first university in the state to have "Up 'Til Dawn." This was an all-night party that raised money for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. The event raised $25,000 for the cause.

UL Lafayette was the first university to announce its partnership with Lafayette Parish School System for participation on a Professional Developmental School Program. This program involves education majors acting as student teachers at the three Professional Development Schools.

Plans for a pool project were released. The new pool area will include four pools: one pool for various swimming activities, a small circular pool with a hot tub, a lap pool and a children's pool. The possible completion date is April of 2001.

Voorhies men's dorm will be closed for a year beginning in May. Officials said that because of selective admissions, the space was simply no longer needed.

Editor's Thank You

Editor-in-Chief

SARAH VIGUERIE

After flipping through the pages in this book, I hope that you have enjoyed reading it as much as we have enjoyed putting it together. While the yearbook staff gets most of the credit, this book was truly an effort by the entire student body and staff. Without the efforts of students and faculty, we would not have had events to take pictures of and people to interview.

This has been an interesting year, especially with all the changes on campus and the centennial festivities. While it is a bit overwhelming to be responsible for covering all these events, it was unbelievably fun being so involved on campus. I could have never done this job without the help of quite a few people, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank them.

First and foremost, I want to thank my parents, Robert and Ramona Viguerie for instilling in me the value of hard work, the morals to do the job the right way, and the love to believe enough in myself to actually do the job. I could not have made it this far without them and the grace of God. Thank you, and I love you mom and dad!

To Lucien Gastineau, thank you for guiding us and remaining supportive and optomistic even throughout the headshot fiasco. We appreciate your insight and your trust in us to give us all the creative freedom we wanted.

Second, I would like to thank the amazing group of people who I worked with. Thank you Kim Bui, photography editor, for never making me worry about photographs for the book. You surpassed what I thought possible of a good photo editor, and all this while being the staff nurse, too! Thank you for your wonderful pictures, blood pressure checks and nutritional information! Best of luck next year, I have no doubt you will be an excellent editor.

Wade McClelland, many thanks for being an excellent layout editor. You were not only an editor, but truly an artist. Your attention to detail and wealth of creative ideas helped to make this book the work of art that it is. You probably put in more hours of work on this book than anyone else, and I can never thank you enough.

Thanks to Michelle Muse for a job well done. Especially thank you for taking all assignments I handed you with a smile on your face, even though I know sometimes you wanted to ask me what the hell I was thinking. Also, thanks for supplying the office with all the toys, and we forgive you for breaking the fan!

Laurie Miller, good job, and thanks for putting up with the rest of us clowns. Thanks for writing all those awesome captions! I know that you'll be a great layout editor next year, and I hope you see your dream of "Tomorrow Land" in print one day.

Kacy Watts, thank you so much for all your hard work. You repeatedly turned in work on time of the highest quality. You handled every task I asked you to do in a professional manner. Good luck in school and in life. I know you'll be great at whatever you decide to do.

Thanks to Tamara Smith, sports editor. Thanks for all your work and best of luck in the future.

To Rachelle Roy, groups editor, we missed you in the spring! I wish you could have been here to see us finish up the book. Hope all is well in Washington. Thank you for your commitment and hard work in the fall.

To the rest of staff, many many, many thanks! Photographers - Nicole Champagne, Will Blackman, Aaron Lemoine, Laura Kaplan, Richard Garneau, Miguel Lasala and Andrew Nunn, you guys did a wonderful job! Writers - Jammel Beckham, Elliot LeNormand, Jamie Quebedeaux, Rachel Andrepont, Cheramie Richard, Jerrod Adams and layout designer Connie Cazaworx, I appreciate your hard work and dedication! Special thanks to computer genius Chris Nodd, you were a lifesaver!

Also, thank you to the SGA office. Thanks to Miss Sandra, we were so glad to see you back at work! Thanks for letting us use the copy and fax machines. To Marie, thanks for popping your head in the office every so often and making us laugh. I hope you enjoy the book, after all, your face is probably in it more than anyone else's! To Brad, the Honorable Viguerie says thanks for the laughs! To Terris, thanks for all the free food and drinks, and fishing expedition will not soon be forgotten!

To Miss Janella, thank you for taking such good care of us.

Thanks to Miss Suzie for all your help and support.

So many faculty and staff agreed to help us whenever we needed pictures and information that I unfortunately do not have room to name them all, but to everyone who pitched in to help us out, a heart felt thank you.

I thank you to all of my teachers for providing me with the knowledge to prepare myself for this job and for showing me the tools necessary to be a happy and successful person.

Lastly, I want to thank my friends because I could never have done this without such a supportive, loving and fun group of people! Cristina, a.k.a. Brie, gracias! You are such a good friend! Thanks for listening to my troubles and dragging me out of the office when I need to relax and have fun. Thanks to Dawn, Sheryl, Mitzi, Jenine, Stephanie and Tonya. We had fun in the good times, and you guys still liked me after the bad times, so thanks. I could not have done this without ya'll! Special thanks to Kent for being like a big brother to me. Thanks for reminding me to believe in myself, telling me that anything is possible and giving me the confidence to believe it! To Anne and Jessica, a.k.a. Parm, we faced some similar frustrations with school and work and I enjoyed our friendship. Good luck in the future; I know you guys will be successful. Last but definitely not least, thank you John. Sorry about your picture, but your picture or the editor - I think you got the better end of the deal! Thanks for your care and support. Once again, thank you to everyone!

The Colophon

The L'Acadien yearbook operates with the freedom of the press and protections of the First Amendment of the United States Constitution. Taylor Publishing Company, 1550 W. Mockingbird, Dallas, Texas, 75235, published ". . .this Minute," volume 81 of L'Acadien, through an open-bid contract with the University of Louisiana at Lafayette office of purchasing.

An assessment of $12 per full-time undergraduate student was included in the fall semester registration to fund the production of L'Acadien.

The book was designed using Macintosh computers. In-house graphic designers, under the supervision of the editor-in-chief, designed all layouts. Quark Express™ 4.0, Adobe Illustrator® 7.0.1 and Adobe Photoshop® 5.0 were used for computer illustrations, art work and type effects. All pictures were scanned into Photoshop using an in-house Microtek Scanmaker E3, Umax Astra 1200S scanner and a Minolta Quickscan 35 negative scanner.

All information was sent to Taylor on Iomega Zip 100 megabyte disks and Verbatim CD-RW 650mb compact discs for reproduction and binding. The book was printed using offset lithography.

Type faces used include the theme standards Palatino, Arial, Keeple, & [illegible] in addition to numerous others.

The cover design was developed in conjunction with the layout editor, layout artists and editor-in-chief.

The editor-in-chief assigned copy to staff and contributing writers. Section editors and the editor-in-chief proofed all copy for submission to the publishing company.

Section editors, the editor-in-chief and layout designers selected all photos. Staff members and contributing photograpers shot all photographs, and local processing services developed all photographs. UL Lafayette Parking and Transit Office, in conjunction with the student identification card process, submitted all student and faculty portraits. Sorority and fraternity group shots were either taken by staff, submitted by members of the organization, or submitted by national composite picture companies. Missing group or Greek organizations did not make an appointment or did not turn in a photo after repeated requests.

The 1999 - 2000 L'Acadien, volume 81, is copyrighted and may not be reproduced in any form, except for educational purposes, without prior written permission of the current editor-in-chief, the UL Lafayette Communications Committee and the UL Lafayette Vice President of Student Affairs.

Inquiries, suggestions, information on articles, photos, employment, and comments on the yearbook can be directed to L'Acadien, P.O . Box 40533, Lafayette, La., 70504 or at (337)482-6961. Thank you for supporting another outstanding yearbook.

This book is dedicated

They truly and wholly possessed the qualities of a Ragin' Cajun.

Their accomplishments

and contributions were many,

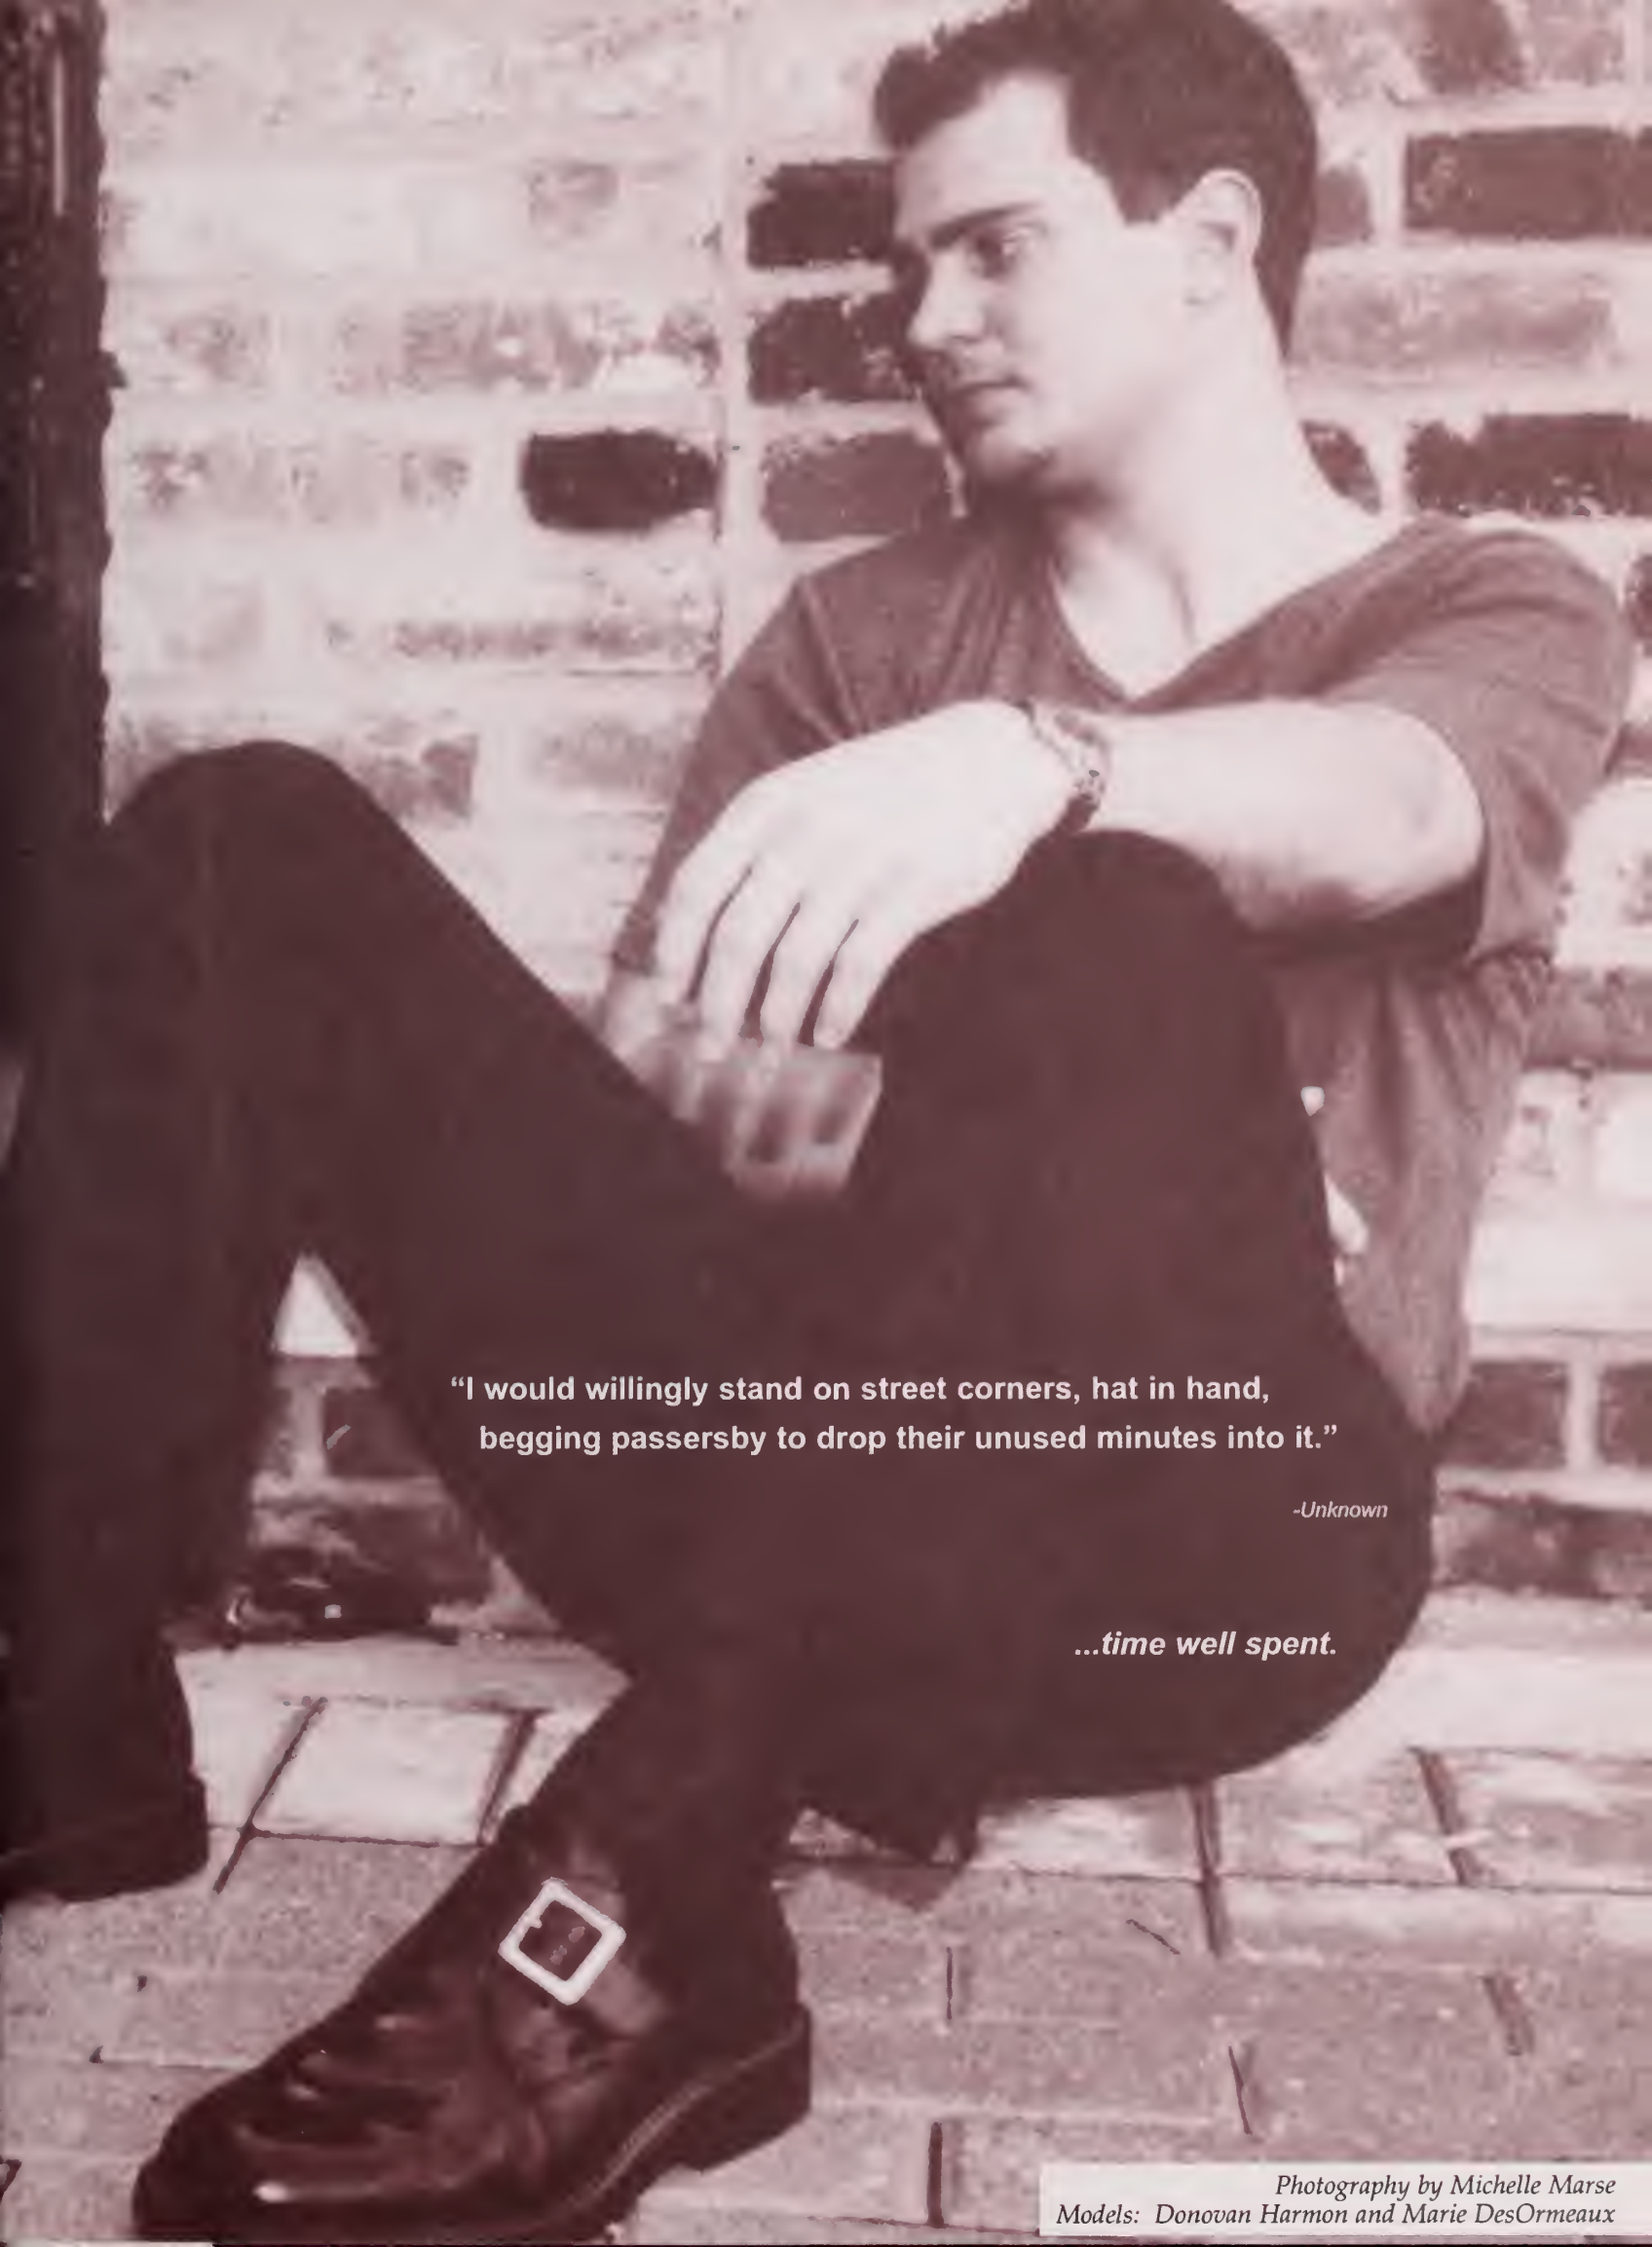

and they are greatly missed.
